THE PROCEEDINGS

ON THE ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE

The Annual Address of the President of the Essex Institute, for May, 1903, called attention to the approach of the One Hundredth Anniversary of the birth of Hawthorne, and suggested that it might be well for a special committee of that body to consider the question whether or not it would meet the views of those likely to be interested in the event if the Institute should take the initiative in exercises commemorating it. Should it be found that no other organization claimed precedence in the matter,—that a general desire existed that some notice should be taken of the day, and that the City Authorities of Salem and others entitled to consideration were cordially inclined to entrust the arrangements to the Essex Institute, it would then be necessary to decide, upon thorough acquaintance with all the possibilities, whether it was best for the Institute to assume the burden. The matter was placed in the hands of a special committee consisting of Robert S. Rantoul, Francis H. Appleton, William O. Chapman, Henry M. Batchelder and Henry C. Leach.

The Fourth of July, the actual day of Hawthorne's birth, was found to be a day so ill-fitted for literary exercises in Salem as to be practically out of the question. With a view to greater freedom in consulting the convenience of speakers, the first thought of approximating as closely as possible to the actual date of birth was abandoned. There was found to be a general desire that the exercises should be absolutely simple and that they should be designed on such a scale as to invite the presence of the large class of persons to whom so interesting an occasion would be likely to appeal.

The first person thought of for the orator of the day was naturally His Excellency, Ambassador Joseph Hodges Choate, an honored son of Salem. It was found that there was no possibility of his being able to be present and Samuel McChord Crothers, D. D., pastor of the First Parish in Cambridge, was invited. He acceded to the wishes of the Institute and delivered the address forming the leading feature of this report. It only remains to say that the exercises were held on the afternoon of June twenty-third, 1904, in the Cadet Armory at Salem,—that the audience was large, appreciative and closely attentive throughout,—that simple decorations of hawthorn, of laurel, and of Federal flags draping a life-size portrait of Hawthorne which had just been finished in oils by Caliga, relieved, to some extent, the grim severity of the walls, and that Miss Hildegarde Hawthorne, herself a writer and the daughter of a writer, representing the third generation of the most distinguished family in American letters, graced the occasion with her presence. Miss Hawthorne had never been in Salem.

The President of the Institute called the meeting to order at three o'clock, the stage being occupied by special guests of the occasion.

OPENING REMARKS

BY ROBERT S. RANTOUL

PRESIDENT OF THE ESSEX INSTITUTE

I have been asked to call this gathering to order. This I do with the greatest pleasure. Hawthorne was more thoroughly identified with Salem than with any other place. His genius savours of our ancient soil. Pure Salem blood coursed through his veins. I doubt if any other place could have produced just such a personality. More of his sixty years of life were passed here than in any other place,—more than in all other places. Salem may be regarded as his workshop, and it was here that he found and treasured up the material from which he wrought his marvelously constructed and elaborated wares. He frequented, during the formative period of his life, the old streets,—the old wharves,—the old gardens,—the old libraries,—the old residences of Salem. He frequented the old Registries of Deeds and of Wills, and the old Cemeteries, and their Records took him back to the time of the settlement. His childish fancy fed on the traditions of Salem, a quaint old seaport, whose world-wide commerce kept us, at that time, in touch with the older civilizations, and brought us on neighborly terms with every distant corner of the earth. Our libraries,—our schools,—our eminent position in science and in letters,—gave the rare boy the mental atmosphere his genius craved. What other place of thirteen thousand souls could have afforded Hawthorne the tonic stimulant of minds like Holyoke,—Bowditch,—Story,—Prescott,—Pickering,—King,—Pierce,—Worcester! Probably no equal population in the world, maintaining its town autonomy and trusting to its own activities and resources, its own initiative, could have served him better. We were supporting one of the earliest and by far the most noteworthy of the local Lyceums. Judge White was its Founder, and when Hawthorne became its Secretary it was offering to Emerson his most favored platform. There was established at Salem, before Hawthorne left College, an incorporated County Historical Society, which has ripened into the Essex Institute, and of its galleries and archives he became a frequenter, as "The American Note-Books" abundantly attest.

Time would fail me to show in detail in what musty records,—on what mouldering grave-stones,—under the heavy-timbered roof-trees of what colonial homesteads he found the vitalizing inspiration for his strange conceits,—quaint names and outlines for the creatures of his teeming brain. For names he adopted, without scruple, those he found about him. Hollingworth, as he told Whipple, was the name first chosen for the Blithedale Romance, and Hollingworth was the name of an ancestor and land-holder from whom the Hathorne Farm on Salem Neck descended. Thomas Maule was the name of a disputatious and intolerant Quaker writer and magnate of Salem. We show you the grave of Surveyor Pue. Swinnerton was a name he found not only cut on a grave-stone at "Burying Point" but also signed as witness to the deed of a Hathorne estate. Jervase Helwyse was a grandchild of Major William Hathorne. So of Vennor, Holgrave, Pyncheon and others. He seemed to take no thought for names, but used them as he found them ready to his hand. Any name seemed to answer his purpose, so it had the true archaic flavor, suited to the atmosphere of the period he was striving to reproduce. If Dickens evolved names "out of his own consciousness," compounded in the hope of making them an index of the characters he was portraying—if Scott chose names for their local flavor, so that they seemed almost part and parcel of the scenes he was depicting,—no such principle of nomenclature is discernable in Hawthorne. But rather he seems to have saved himself all trouble on this score by accepting such actual names as his family tree and his Salem boyhood furnished.

From Salem came to him the unconscious influence which every sensitive, impressionable boy drinks in from his surroundings. With every varying aspect of our seashore landscape his solitary rambles made him well acquainted, as with every picturesque phase of human life cropping out about him in the microcosm of this rarely developed little Salem world. Would he lose himself in the reverie of a day's seclusion on the water? It is Salem harbor and the headlands and islands of Salem harbor that make a background for his musings! Did he crave the realistic quality of those romantic sea-tales to be had for the asking from the ancient vikings of a busy port? It was to the Toll House on Essex Bridge that twilight lured him forth,—more like the owl every year, as he wrote to Longfellow, and rarely venturing abroad until after dusk,—and there he sits aloof and silent, amidst the group of skippers gathered about the stove, companions in peril of the father he had never known, and greedily absorbs the epic recital of their actual achievement in return for which the dreamy tenor of his life afforded him no experiences to relate. Would he hold communion with the child-element in life, out of which was unconsciously shaping itself in his fancy the elfin-figure of little Pearl? He sought out, for as yet he had no children, his little cousin Forrester,* and led her by the hand from street to street through ancient precincts of the town, descanting as they went on the scenes those beetling-gabled domiciles had witnessed, and drinking in with breathless zest the comments of his youthful charge. Or he stole away, from the mansion-house just across the street, with his little cousin Barstow,† and led her a rout among the circus wagons and the show-day tumult, until the bell of of the Town Crier, proclaiming "a child lost," broke in upon their dreams, and the rescued child, as though delivered from a spell, awoke the heroine of "Little Annie's Ramble."

But Salem has better cause than any accident of residence or birth to lay her tribute at the feet of Hawthorne. She recalls with pride to-day that here, within a few rods of where we sit, was evolved the master-work that placed him in his niche among the World's creators of immortal fiction. Salem has bright pages in the story of her past and hopes for brighter pages yet to come. But until she shall have laid the world under a heavier debt than she has done in giving it the "Scarlet Letter," Salem will still be acclaimed by her sons, and she will still be honored by English readers everywhere as the Home of Hawthorne.

I take pleasure in presenting to you, as the presiding officer of the day, His Honor, the Mayor of Salem.

*Annie M. Forrester, a daughter of John, who was the son of Simon Forrester and of his wife, Rachel (Hathorne), a sister of Hawthorne's father, Miss Forrester died in 1887. Her mother was Charlotte, a sister of Judge Joseph Story. Her name may have suggested the title for "Little Annie's Ramble."

†Eleanor Forrester (Barstow) Condit was a daughter of Dr. Gideon Barstow, M. C., and of his wife, Nancy (Forrester) Barstow, whose father and mother were Simon and Rachel (Hathorne) Forrester. Dr. Barstow's residence was the brick house opposite Plummer Hall, now numbered 131 Essex Street, Salem. Mrs. Condit died in 1886.

INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS

BY JOSEPH N. PETERSON

MAYOR OF SALEM

It is a pleasure and an honor to represent the City of Salem on an occasion like this; and to preside over such a gathering as we see assembled here to-day. This is a unique event. We meet to honor the memory of him who has, for almost half a century, been acknowledged by the world to be the foremost man of letters that America has produced. We in Salem of the present generation take special pride in the event. Whether Nathaniel Hawthorne was always honored and appreciated in Salem by the people of his time, it is certain that the Salem of to-day holds him in high esteem, and appreciates fully the great name he won in the field of letters.

We also realize that Hawthorne added to the fame of the city in which he was born and in which he lived for half his sixty years.

Pardon me, if, on this occasion, without for a moment yielding in acknowledgement of the greatness of Hawthorne, I recall some of the other notable men who were natives of Salem. Hawthorne was the most celebrated of them all; and so wide is his fame that the fact is sometimes overlooked that Salem has given to the world other worthy men, such as her early statesman, Timothy Pickering, the friend of Washington; William Wetmore Story, man of letters, and artist of international fame; Prescott, whose name as a historian is the equal of Hawthorne's as a writer of romance; Bowditch, the great mathematician and navigator. Judge Story was "one of us" for many years: so we feel that he belongs to us, as well as our distinguished citizen, native born, Joseph H. Choate,—that we are entitled to partake of the glory which comes to them. We have men and women of literary attainments in Salem to-day. We have artists and musicians of whom we are proud; and I doubt not that in the earlier days, when great men were not as plenty as they are to-day, some citizens of the Salem of to-day would be more distinguished.

The City of Salem, in its official capacity, is glad to unite with the Essex Institute in commemorating to-day the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Nathaniel Hawthorne. The Essex Institute has done me the honor to invite me to preside over the exercises of this day; but I feel I should trespass on the time allotted to the distinguished men who have been invited to address us this afternoon, should I enter on any extended remarks.

Our thanks are certainly due to those who have consented to speak to-day of this distinguished son of Salem; and I am quite sure that we shall listen to them with pleasure and profit.

The Essex Institute, in seeking for some one to address us on the literary work of Nathaniel Hawthorne, has been very fortunate in its selection of a student and lover of Hawthorne to speak to us on this occasion. It gives me great satisfaction to introduce to you Dr. Samuel M. Crothers, the pastor of the First Church in Cambridge.

ADDRESS

BY SAMUEL M. CROTHERS, D. D.

OF CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

“I sat down by the wayside of life like a man under enchantment.” So Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote of his own visionary youth, and, truth to tell, the spell lasted through life.

The wayside itself was not conducive to dreams. It was a busy thoroughfare. Eager traffickers jostled one another and there was much crying up of new wares. Many important personages went noisily along. There was a fresh interest in all sort of good works and many improvements on the roadway. There were not many Priests or Levites passing by on the other side, for ecclesiasticism was not in fashion, but there were multitudes of good Samaritans each one intent on his own brand new device for universal helpfulness. There were so many of them that the poor man who fell among philanthropists often sighed for the tender mercies of the thieves—the thieves, at least, when they had done their work would let him alone. From time to time there would come groups of eager Reformers, advance agents of the millennium. At last there came down the road troops hurrying to the front and there was the distant sound of battle.

It was a stirring time, the noon of the nineteenth century; and the stir was nowhere more felt than in New England. It was a ferment of speculation, a whirl of passion, a time of great aspiration and of no mean achievement.

But, if you would get a sense of all this, do not turn to the pages of Nathaniel Hawthorne. The ardor of Transcendentalism, the new spirit of reform, the war between the States, these were noted but they made no very vivid impression on the man who sat under enchantment. There was an interval between these happenings and his consciousness, that made them seem scarcely contemporaneous.

It is a fashion in literary criticism to explain an author by his environment. With Hawthorne this method is not successful. It is not that his environment was not interesting in itself. His genius was essentially aloof. It was a plant that drew its nourishment from the air rather than from the soil. There are some men who have the happy faculty of making themselves at home wherever they happen to be. Hawthorne, wherever he had been born, would have looked upon the scene with something of a stranger's eye. Indeed, when we think about it, the wonder is that most of us are able to take the world in such a matter of fact way. One would suppose that we had always been here, instead of being transient guests who can not even engage our rooms a day in advance.

It is perhaps a happy limitation which makes us to forget our slight tenure, and to feel an absolute ownership in the present moment. We are satisfied with the passing experience because it appears to us as permanent.

To the man who sat by the wayside the present moment did not stand in the sunshine sufficient unto itself. It did not appear, as it did to the man of affairs, an ultimate and satisfying reality. He was not unobservant. He saw the persons passing by. But each one, in the present moment, seemed but a fugitive escaping from the past into the future,—futile flight! unavailing freedom! for in the Future the Past stands waiting for it. As he looked at each successive action it was as one who watches the moving shadow of an old deed, which now for some creature has become doom.

Did I say that Hawthorne was little influenced by his environment? It would be truer to say that the environment to which he responded was that to which most men are so strangely oblivious. He felt what another Salem mystic has expressed :

“Around us ever lies the enchanted land
In marvels rich to thine own sons displayed.”

The true-born Yankee has always persisted, in spite of the purists, in using “I guess” as equivalent to “I think.” To his shrewd good-humored curiosity, all thinking resolves itself into a kind of guess work; and one man has as good a right to his guess as another.

It is a far cry from the talk of the village store to Emerson and Hawthorne, but to these New Englanders thinking was still a kind of guessing. The observer looks at the outward show of things, which has such an air of finality, and says—“I guess there’s something behind all this. I guess it’s worth while to look into it.”

Such a mind is not deterred by the warnings of formal logic that there is “no thoroughfare.” When it leaves the public road and sees the sign—“Private way, dangerous passing” it says, “That looks interesting. I guess I’ll take that.”

And from our streets and shops and newspapers, from our laboratories and lecture rooms and bureaus of statistics, it is, after all, such a little way to the border-land of mystery, where all minds are on an equality and where the wisest can but dimly guess the riddles that are propounded.

“The fate of the man child,
The meaning of man.
Known friend of the unknown
Dædalian plan,
Out of sleeping a waking
Out of waking a sleep,
Life death overtaking,
Deep underneath deep.”

Hawthorne belonged to no school or party. To the men of his generation he was like the minister of whom he writes who preached with a veil over his face.

Nor is his relation in thought to his ancestry more intimate than that to his contemporaries. Born to the family of New England Puritanism, we think we recognize the family likeness—and yet we are not quite sure. There are traits that suggest a spiritual changling.

When we enter into the realm of Hawthorne's imagination we are conscious that “Something sombre and severe O'er the enchanted landscape reigns.”

Is not this a survival of the puritanic spirit, with its brooding mysticism, its retributive predestination, its sense of the judgment to come? It was said of Carlyle that he was a Calvinist who had lost his creed—may not the same be said of Hawthorne? The old New England theology had in him become attenuated to a mere film, but through it all we see the old New England Conscience.

Doubtless there is much of this transmitted influence. Hawthorne himself insisted upon it. Speaking of “the stern and black-browed Puritan ancestors" he said "let them scorn me as they will, strong traits of their nature have intertwined themselves with mine."

But it is possible to exaggerate such likenesses. In Hawthorne's case there is danger of argument in a circle. There is something in Hawthorne's imagination, in its sombre mysticism, in its brooding sense of destiny, which is like that of the spirit of the inhabitants of Salem and Boston in the old days when they walked through the narrow streets and through the shadowy woodland ways pondering the fatal sequences of life.

But how do we see these old Puritans? We see them through Hawthorne's eyes. His imagination peoples for us the old houses. Was Hawthorne's genius tinged with Puritanism, or are our conceptions of the Puritan character largely Hawthornesque? It is not necessary to argue this matter; it might be better to answer "yes" to both questions.

It is the privilege of creative genius to imprint his own features upon his forbears. It is difficult here to determine which is cause and which is effect. How marvelously Rembrandt gets the spirit of the Dutch Burgomeisters! It was fortunate for him that he had such subjects—stalwart men with faces that caught the light so marvellously. Yes, but had it not been for Rembrandt, who would have told us that these Dutch gentlemen were so picturesque.

The subject of a good artist is accurately figured; the subject of a great artist is transfigured. We cannot separate the historic reality from the transfiguring light.

But however Hawthorne may have been influenced by his Puritan inheritance it would be hard to find one whose habitual point of view was further removed from what we are accustomed to call the "New England Conscience." It is the characteristic of that type of conscience that it has an ever-present and sometimes oppressive sense of personal responsibility. It is militant and practical rather than mystical. To it evil is not something to be endured but something to be resisted. If there is a wrong it must be righted, and with as little delay as possible.

The highest praise a Puritan could give his pastor was that he was "a painful preacher." Jonathan Mitchell writing of the beginnings of the church in Cambridge, says that the people of Cambridge "were a gracious, savory-spirited people, principled by Mr. Shepard, liking an humbling, heart-breaking ministry and spirit."

The Puritan theology was based on Predestination, but the Puritan temper was not fatalistic. When that latter day Puritan, Lyman Beecher, was expounding the doctrines of the Divine Decree, one of his sons asked him,— "Father; what if we are decreed to be lost?" The answer was "Fight the decrees, my boy!"

The Calvinistic spirit was exactly opposite to the fatalistic acquiescence which shifts the responsibility from the creature to the Creator. To be sure the fall of man took place a long time ago, but we cannot say that it was none of our business. It was not an hereditary misfortune to be borne with fortitude; it was to be assumed as our personal guilt. "Original sin" means real sin. Adam sinned as the typical and representative man, and every man became a sinner. No individual could plead an alibi. The "conviction of sin" was not the acquiescence in a penalty, it was the heartbreaking consciousness of the "exceeding sinfulness of sin."

"In Adam's fall we sinned all." When they said that, they were thinking not of Adam but of themselves. They did it; it was the guilt that was imputed to them.

How sensitive consciences tortured themselves in the attempt fully to realize their guilt one may learn by reading such intimate revelations as are to be found in the journal of David Brainard.

The real inheritors of this type of conscience were to be found among many of the radical reformers and agitators who were Hawthorne's contemporaries and with whom he had little in common. When their formal creed had fallen off, there remained the sense of personal guilt for original sin.

The sin of the Nation and of the whole Social Order weighed heavily upon them and tortured them and they found relief only in action.

All this was foreign to Hawthorne's mind. In his treatment of sin there is always a sense of moral detachment. We are not made to see as George Eliot makes us see the struggle with temptation; the soul, like a wild thing, seeing the tempting bait and drawing nearer to the trap. Hawthorne begins after the deed is done. He shows us

“The wild thing taken in a trap

Which sees the trapper coming through the woods!”

Of what is the trap made? It is made of a deed already done. Whence comes the ghostly trapper; he is no stranger in the woods,—There is no staying his advance as he makes his fatal rounds.

In the preface to the House of the Seven Gables the author gives the argument of the story,—“the truth, namely, that the wrong doing of one generation lives into the successive ones, and, divesting itself of every temporary advantage, becomes a pure and uncontrollable mischief.”

This is the theme of the Greek tragedy Nemesis. The deed is done and cannot be undone ; the inevitable consequences must be endured.

In the Scarlet Letter, when Hester and Roger Chillingworth review the past and peer into the future, Hester says, "I said but now that there can be no good event for him or thee or me who are wandering together in this gloomy maze of evil, and stumbling at every step over the guilt wherewith we have strewn our path."

But is the present stumbling guilt or is it merely misery? The old man replies "By the first slip awry thou didst plant the germ of evil, but since that moment it has been a dark necessity. Ye that have wronged me are not sinful, save in a kind of typical illusion, neither am I fiend-like who have snatched a fiend's office from his hands. It is our fate. Let the black flower blossom as it may."

Strange words to come from one who had sat in a Puritan meeting-house! It is such comment as the Greek Chorus might make watching the unfolding of the doom of the House of Agamemnon! And when the tale of the Scarlet Letter has been told how does the Author himself look upon it? How does he distribute praise and blame?

"To all these shadowy beings so long our near acquaintances,—as well Roger Chillingworth as his companions, we would fain be merciful. It is a curious subject of observation and inquiry whether love and hatred be not the same thing at bottom. Each in its utmost development supposes a high degree of intimacy and heart-knowledge ; each renders one individual dependent for his spiritual life on another ; each leaves the passionate lover or the no less passionate hater forlorn and desolate by the withdrawal of its subject. Philosophically considered therefore the passions seem essentially the same except that one happens to be seen in celestial radiance and the other in a dusky lurid glow." This is not the New England Conscience uttering itself. It is an illusive and questioning spirit.

If in his attitude toward human Destiny Hawthorne was in some essential respects un-Puritan, so also was he un-modern. There is a characteristic difference between antique and modern symbols for those necessary processes, beyond the sphere of our own wills, by which our lives are determined. The Ancients pictured it with austere simplicity. Life is a simple thread. The Fates spin it. It is drawn out on the distaff and cut off by the fatal shears.

Compare this with the phrase Carlyle loved to quote "the roaring loom of Time." Life is not a spinning wheel but a loom. A million shuttles fly; a million threads are inextricably interwoven. You cannot long trace the single thread; you can only discern the growing pattern. There is inevitable causation but it is not simple but complex. The situation at the present moment is the result not of one cause but of innumerable causes, and it is in turn the cause of results that are equally incalculable. We are a part of "the web of being blindly wove

By man and beast and air and sea."

Men of science show us how the whole acts upon each part and each part acts upon the whole. Modern novelists attempt, not always successfully, to give the impression of the amazing complexity of actual life, where all sorts of things are going on at the same time.

Whether we look upon it as his limitation or as his good fortune Hawthorne adhered to the spinning wheel rather than the loom. We see the antique Fates drawing out the thread. A long series of events follow one another from a single cause.

A part of the power of Hawthorne's over our imagination lies in the singleness of purpose. In the Marble Faun we are told "the stream of Miriam's trouble kept its way through this flood of human life, and neither mingled with it nor was turned aside."

We are made to see the dark streams that do not mingle, nor turn aside, and we watch their fatal flow.

But is this real normal life? In such life do not the streams mingle? Are not evil influences quickly neutralized, as noxious germs die in the sunshine? No one would more readily acknowledge this than Hawthorne. He says: "It is not, I apprehend, a healthy kind of mental occupation to devote ourselves too exclusively to the study of individual men and women. If the person under examination be one's self the result is pretty certain to be diseased action of the heart almost before we can snatch a second glance. Or if we take the freedom to put a friend under the microscope we thereby insulate him from many of his true relations, magnify his peculiarities, inevitably tear him into parts, and of course patch him clumsily together again. What wonder, then, that we be frightened at such a monster, which, after all—though we can point to every feature of his deformity in the real personage—may be said to have been created mainly by ourselves."

The critic of Hawthorne could not describe better the limitation of his stories as pictures of real life. His characters, however clearly conceived, are insulated from many of their real relations, and their peculiarities are magnified.

In the Preface to the Scarlet Letter he says that the tale "wears to my eye a stern and sombre aspect, too much ungladdened by the tender and familiar influences which soften almost every scene of Nature and real life, and which undoubtedly should soften every picture of them."

One who would defend Hawthorne the Author against Hawthorne the Critic must point out the kind of literature to which his work belongs. When we judge it by the rule of the romance or of the realistic novel we fail to do justice to its essential quality. The romancer, the story-teller pure and simple, is attracted by the swift sequence of events. His nimble fancy follows a plot as a kitten follows a string. Now it happens that in a world constituted as ours is the sequence of events follows a moral order. A good story has always in it an element of poetic justice. But the romancer does not tell his story for the sake of the moral. He professes to be as much surprised when it is discovered as is the most innocent reader. In like manner the realistic novel, in proportion as it is a faithful portrayal of life, has an ethical lesson. But the writer disclaims any purpose of teaching it. His business is to tell what the world is like. He leaves the rest to your intelligence.

But there is another kind of literature ; it is essentially allegory. The allegorist takes a naked truth and clothes it with the garments of the imagination. Frequently the clothes do not fit and the poor truth wanders about awkwardly, self-conscious to the last degree. But if the artist be a genius the abstract thought becomes a person.

Hawthorne's work is something more than allegory, but his mind worked allegorically. His characters were abstract before they became concrete. He was not a realist aiming to give a comprehensive survey of the actual world. He consciously selected the incidents and scenes which would illustrate his theme.

In his conclusion of the Marble Faun, when the actors have withdrawn, the Author comes before the curtain and says that he designed "the Story and the characters, to bear, of course, a certain relation to human nature and human life, but still to be so artfully and airily removed from our mundane sphere that some laws and proprieties of their own should be implicitly and insensibly acknowledged. The idea of the modern Faun for example loses all the poetry and beauty which the Author fancied in it and becomes nothing better than a grotesque absurdity if we bring it into the actual light of day." This is not realism. Tennyson describes the mood out of which such writing comes and to which it is addressed.

"I seemed to sail with Arthur under looming shores,
Point after point, and on till dawn
When dreams begin to feel the truth and stir of day."

In this mood the bounds between romance and allegory fade away; persons become symbols and symbols have breathed into them the breath of life. The story and the truth it shadows are one.

The mood is common in poetry. Poets like Dante and Spencer and Shelley from it have given us

"Wise and lovely songs
Of fate and God and chance and chaos old,
And love."

There is a point where "dreams begin to feel the truth and stir of day," where the incidents of existence assume a dream-like character and where dreams become transparent symbols of reality. There are moods in which our familiar world seems strange to us, and we walk in it as on some bewildered shore.

In such moods to meet Hawthorne is a great experience. He is no longer shy and aloof, but he opens to us his heart, and with friendly zeal points out each object of interest—for in this border-land he is at home.

Bowdoin College, in Maine, said His Honor, the Mayor, in presenting the next speaker, has the distinction of having graduated many notable men, whose names have become famous, including Hawthorne and Longfellow and Franklin Pierce, a President of the United States.

We are fortunate in having with us a representative of the College, and I have the pleasure of introducing to you the Honorable Joseph W. Symonds, LL. D., of Portland, Maine, an Overseer and graduate of Bowdoin College, who will speak for Bowdoin.

ADDRESS

BY JOSEPH W. SYMONDS, LL. D.

OF PORTLAND, MAINE

Among the men, whose genius and fame have become part of our common inheritance at Bowdoin College, whose influence lingers as a potent spell in that air, although their footsteps had ceased to sound in the college halls, their shadows to fall upon the breezy walks, long before our feet had trodden them; among these men, and foremost among them, remains still, and will always remain the noble presence of Nathaniel Hawthorne. To our imagination, he stands somewhat aloof from the group, in the seclusion of a strange experience, with a shadow resting upon his face that might be of a passing cloud, but does not pass, intent, absorbed, as if he were following to the utmost verge of thought the threads of sombre hue on which human life is woven in changeful light and shade.

As you all know, Hawthorne had lived in Maine before he went to Bowdoin. After his father's death, his mother made her home in the house which her brothers built for her on their new lands in Maine, on the shores of the beautiful Sebago Lake; but this must have been like a home in exile to them both; a brief stay in the wilderness; part of the heavy bereavement of his father's early death. His father had sailed away, never to return—an event which bore upon its gloomy wings not only the darkness of mystery, but the burden of perpetual loss. The family-home of culture and long association was in Salem, to which his mother and he were doubtless glad to return;—although I like to remember that with Hawthorne himself recollections of Raymond and its lakes and mountains always mingled pleasantly with the memories of youth.

A boyhood that had in it all the thrill and glow of the morning, dreamily pale or flushed, tastes long of the bitterness of a sorrow it cannot comprehend, learns the meaning of the sadness that smiles only deepen on the face of his mother most fondly loved; and, so, loiters thoughtfully at the open gateway of life. Its free and healthful spirit remains, but it has learned the pensive charm of solitude, and all the possibilities of abstracted thought are opening in its growing love of solitary rambling and musing. There are dark places in which fancy is already flitting; mental visitors, whose beauty is arrayed in sombre garb. Early experience and early reading alike tend to give peculiar color to the mind. The tendrils of thought, aspiring to the light, must climb through deep shadows to the sun.

In his preface to "The Stone Image," addressed to his friend Horatio Bridge, Hawthorne has given us the pleasantest possible picture of his life at Bowdoin. Familiar as it is, with your leave I will read a few lines of it. "I know not," he says, "whence your faith came; but, while we were lads together at a country college, gathering blueberries, in study hours, under those tall, academic pines, or watching the great logs as they tumbled along the current of the Androscoggin, or shooting pigeons and gray squirrels in the woods, or bat-fowling in the summer-twilight, or catching trouts in that shadowy little stream, which, I suppose, is still wandering riverward through the forest, though you and I will never cast a line in it again,—two idle lads, in short (as we need not fear to acknowledge now) doing a hundred things that the Faculty never heard of, or else it had been the worse for us,—still it was your prognostic of your friend's destiny that he was to be a writer of fiction."

Returning from College to his home in Salem, dimly conscious of slumbering forces, as real and potent as those which charge the summer cloud, aspiring, sincere, swayed by the sweet influences of compelling stars, to which a genius without alloy so sensitively responded, in the silence of long and strange isolation he pursued his task of elaborating line by line, with a minute fidelity copied from nature, a series of stories of exquisite beauty in themselves, that are yet only so many threads of gold, to hold within the range of our duller sight the dream-lighted things which in far flight his imagination had traced. From that time on, his real life, the things which so interest and fascinate us in him, had but the slightest frame or setting in external events; our interest is in him and in his work, not in the facts of his personal history. These may trace his course of life, but how little they tell us of the life itself!

Salem and its history, the scene of some of the most intense manifestations of early Puritan life, how closely the period of Hawthorne's youth is identified with them! Early New England history and literature were a store-house of materials for him as the Homeric poems for the Greek dramatists. Or we may take another illustration. The memories of classical antiquity did not more surely inspire the romantic career of the mediæval Tribune, which sprang from the crumbling memorials of the ancient State like a flower out of the crevices of ruin, than was Hawthorne's thought nurtured by the traditions of our New England past. The imagination of the last of the Tribunes dwelt in the stately order of the age of the Cæsars and in the glory of the Roman Republic not more intensely than Hawthorne's on the period of heroic struggle and sombre saintliness, which is the grand and rugged background of New England history. It is only this looking into the past that makes us think of the two together; strangely contrasted as they are in all else. The one dazzled Europe by a sort of brilliant knight-errantry. The other mused upon eternal laws.

But in studying the genius of Hawthorne, it is possible to lay too much stress upon the accidental influences of place and circumstance. The main impulse was from within, the natural unfolding of the flower from the germ. No force from without could change its quality. Events might thrust themselves upon his attention. They could not determine the course or the nature of his thought. The clear, cold light, in which he wrought such subtle analysis of the mind and heart had its sources within himself. If his thought grew out of the past, it grew by an inner force and law. He was always superior to the materials in which he worked. The cunning of his hand was the same, in wood, or marble, or gold. At his touch, a spiritual significance quickens the dull round of daily duties, and the ordinary events of the day or the night brighten imperceptibly away into the halo which surrounds them.

"The romances of Hawthorne," Dean Stanley said in his lecture on America, "which connect themselves with Italian life may to us for the moment have the most interest, but those which shall possess the most enduring value are the strange scenes of New England in the streets of Boston and Salem," and then, blending Hawthorne's name with other brilliant names of American authors, he added, "such pathetic and elevated sentiments, so intermingled with national sentiment, must have a share in raising the nation above the rustic murmur of parochial or municipal life into the great wave that echoes round the world."

If anything of original creative art in literature has yet been done in America, it has been done by Hawthorne more than by any other.

I would not dwell upon the saddened years after his return to America, his horror of the Civil War, his dread of brute force, his fear that the union of the States was finally broken, that our nation and its polity were but the fragments of a shattered dream, the despair of failing health, the bitter pang at finding himself unable to complete his last great work, his vitality no longer equal to the intense labor of his creative art. Almost the last glimpse we catch of him is from Dr. Holmes, who meeting him on Washington street in Boston was shocked and grieved at the change in him, walking feebly, shrunk and pale, ill and sad, conscious that he could do nothing more, the approach of death visible in his very presence, and still maintaining that peculiar reticence and reserve which seemed to shrink from all allusion to his own troubles and sorrows. This was the very day before that final journey to New Hampshire, where in the silence of the night, on the shore of the beautiful lake with which he and his friend were so familiar, the angel of death, with noiseless step, was present, to relieve the waiting angel of sleep at his bedside ;—and the world-weary man was at rest.

Years ago, an author writing of the literary heavens of the early nineteenth century undertook to set them in constellations. There was the group of stars about the Edinburgh Review,—the four young men who founded it, before three of whom a great future opened, the fourth of whom an early death awaited, at which all England grieved; then there was the Tory element grouped about Blackwood; Charles Lamb and his friends, gathered about the London Magazine, in which the essays of Elia first appeared; here and there a star of the first magnitude, shining separately, and at last Byron and Shelley, a twin-star constellation, the Gemini of the literary firmament of that period.

This may serve to remind us that the same constellation, the Gemini, more than any other, more than all others, rules our Bowdoin heavens. The names of the stars in that constellation are not Byron and Shelley; to us, they are names of finer lustre, even, than those. They are Longfellow and Hawthorne; men of genius both, whose lives moved to ideal ends, in solitude or among men. The aroma of high character and fine culture abides in all they were, in all they have done. Each of them wrote with the scholar's and the artist's pen, and made of his English style an element so pure that the airiest creatures of the imagination might disport themselves at will in it, in all the lightness of motion, in the wavy grace of flowing and vanishing outlines.

And how noble the friendship between them! With generous words in the North American Review, Longfellow hailed the publication of the "Twice Told Tales;" his welcome sympathy invaded even Hawthorne's solitude, greeting him at every triumph. Finally returning sadly from Hawthorne's burial at Concord, Longfellow wrote the familiar poem upon his classmate and friend:

“ Ah, who shall lift that wand of magic power,
And the lost clew regain ?
The unfinished window in Aladdin's tower
Unfinished must remain ! ”

The unfinished window in the charmed palace !

With what splendor of the sunset would Hawthorne have piled it, if he could have lived even to the limit of three score years and ten, but it was not to be. He did not live to see his sixtieth birthday. Unfinished it must remain.

The loss to American literature by Hawthorne's death at that age, who shall estimate it ! He died in the golden glow of the harvest, the ripe wealth of autumn all about him, ungathered into sheaves.

In presenting the next speaker the Mayor said :

While we in Salem claim that the first blood of the Revolution was shed at North Bridge, the town of Concord has the distinction and honor of being the first battleground of the Revolutionary War. Two of America's famous men, Hawthorne and Emerson, made their home in Concord. We are honored by having with us to-day a son of "Emerson, the Sage of Concord" and it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you, Dr. Edward Waldo Emerson, of Concord.

ADDRESS

BY EDWARD W. EMERSON, M. D.

OF CONCORD, MASS.

In my childhood, as I was playing with my sisters, my father returned from his afternoon walk (which it was his habit to take alone) with a younger companion, who came into the porch and looked pleasantly down on me and my sisters, but almost with the first shyness of another child. He was tall and well made, with a brown oval face of much beauty, and dark handsome eyes, though his curly hair was not black. This was Nathaniel Hawthorne, newly returned with his family to make his home on the sunny side of the slope where Concord's Puritan settlers first made theirs. This low line of hills is the scene of the imagined encounter of his hero Septimius Felton and the English officer. It was the only region of Concord which Hawthorne knew, except the river-shores near the Old Manse, in which, when first married, he had dwelt as a tenant for a time. For Hawthorne lived apart in his own world, absolutely unknown to his townsmen, and hardly noting the village as he stalked through it, encased in his magic armor of detachment, when forced to go to the railroad station. When callers came he fled, if time allowed, up the wooded steep behind the house, but if too late and cornered, was genial, though his eyes instinctively looked around for a way of escape. Yet he enjoyed society as one does a cold bath after the dread plunge is taken.

A lady, a valued friend of Hawthorne and Emerson, remarked of Hawthorne when visitors came to his house, that, though his shyness was evident, he always faced the occasion like a man when it came to the point. This lady remarked upon the pleasure Mr. Emerson took in seeing Hawthorne on the rare occasions when they met, when Emerson talked with him, assailing the citadel of his silence from which Hawthorne looked his answers; and she said that persons about Mr. Emerson generally echoed him, and hence it was refreshing to him to find this perfect individual, all himself and nobody else. Mr. Emerson said of him "His way is regal even when he hands the bread."

But he could not get away from his own children and was a delightful father, and so other children who came to see them, saw him too, now and then. And how much children owe Hawthorne, the Eustace Bright of his "Wonder-Book" and "Tanglewood Tales." These are far and away the most charming presentations of the myths of old Greece, and parents are happy who have in their children the excuse of reading them anew. To fully enjoy and understand Hawthorne, begin with the "Wonder-Book" and "Tanglewood Tales"—note the child in the interlude of these books, and in "The Chimæra," the best of the stories;—how it was the little boy's belief in the gleaming steed of Heaven, Pegasus, that strengthened Bellerophon's waning courage and led to his triumph over monsters of the earth, when mounted on him.

As for Hawthorne's introduction of the child so often, In hoc signo vinces may have been an early oracle to this artist. The child-like in him,—the recurrence in his romances of childhood's beauty and faith, and its power to scatter darkness—is one of the prime secrets of their charm.

Hawthorne noted that “in the eyes of a child or other innocent person the image of a cherub or angel is to be seen peeping out ; in those of a vicious person, a devil.” Persons who are repelled by anything short of freest air and light find in Hawthorne only the student of the unwholesome and uncanny. But he was not, like some modern psychologists, disguised as story tellers, through over subtlety enmeshed in his own web. He was an artist: more so some will say than any of his predecessors and contemporaries here—some will say anywhere. Wonderful tapestries came from his loom. He speaks of “the stern old stuff of Puritanism with a gold thread in the web.” Curtis says that Hawthorne everywhere shows “that the black thread is inwoven with all forms of life, with all developments of character.” His background of gloom and fate is like that of an old Flemish picture from which some perfect piece of Nature may stand out focussed in the light, whether of candle or of sun.

Washington Allston said that Coleridge taught him in Rome this Golden Rule, “Never to judge of any work of Art by its defects.” So let us judge Hawthorne by his best work, for all must often fall short of that.

“The House of the Seven Gables” shows Hawthorne’s characteristic charm. Here the ancient house, curse-haunted, shadowing even itself with its projecting storey, is echoed by the withered and unconsciously frowning gentlewoman who lives in its chambers, “over grown with the desolation which watches to obliterate every trace of man’s happier hours.” But the house is as interesting as one of Prout’s old drawings, and the natural refinement of Hawthorne will not allow old Miss Hepzibah to be a farce character. We are not permitted to laugh, only to smile, at the touching old, near-sighted, stiff-kneed, incapable creature. The prematurely aged cousin, demented by his wrongs, deepens the sombre picture. But in this gloom, shines out first devotion and then love,—and then wholesome youth, in the shape of Phoebe Pyncheon, enters and makes Indian summer there. She and the flowers she loves, make the centre of the picture whose color the gloom around only heightens, and Fate is not dominant at last, and the Miracle is new. When Hawthorne has peered into the dark witch-wood, the haunted house, the cursed spring, the hereditary doom, he brings in the chubby child, the damask rose, the faint fragrance of some old-fashioned garden flower, the fearless innocence of youth, and makes from simplest material bright and wholesome pictures, with almost the freshness of morning upon them,—yet there is an atmosphere, a slight subduing of light in all we see in his magic mirror.

His work, mellow from the first, did not, like paintings or wine, need Time to ripen it. There was no more crudity in one of his tales of New England in the days of her rawness than in the Marble Faun—Yes, he is sometimes unwholesome, but not beyond the bounds of what is seemly. Contrast some of his most gruesome raw material as it appears in his note book, with the matter as presented by the artist in a story.

Hawthorne said frankly “life is made up of marble and mud.” But he selected his mud, never touching offal, and, being an artist, knew its use was, not for daubing, but for modelling.

In the days of Hawthorne’s young married life at the Manse, George William Curtis, then living in Concord as a farm-labourer, describes a “conversation” held at one of the houses there.

“It was winter and a great wood-fire blazed upon the hospitable hearth. There were various men and women of note assembled, and I, who listened attentively to all the fine things that were said, was not for some time aware of a man who sat upon the edge of the circle, a little withdrawn, his head slightly thrown forward upon his breast, and his bright eyes clearly burning under his black brow. As I drifted down the stream of talk, this person, who sat silent as a shadow, looked to me as Webster might have looked, had he been a Poet. He rose, and walked to the window, and stood quietly there for a long time, watching the dead, white landscape. No appeal was made to him, nobody looked after him,—the conversation flowed steadily on as if every one understood that his silence was to be respected. It was the same thing at table. In vain the silent man imbibed æsthetic tea. Whatever fancies it inspired did not flower at his lips. But there was a light in his eye that assured me that nothing was lost. So supreme was his silence that it presently engrossed me to the exclusion of everything else. There was very brilliant discourse, but this silence was much more poetic and fascinating. Fine things were said by the philosophers, but much finer things were implied by the dumbness of this gentleman with heavy brows and black hair. When he presently rose and went, Emerson, with his ‘slow wise smile’ that breaks over his face like day over the sky, said, ‘Hawthorne rides well his horse of the night.’”

Since the fair still morning in the youth of the world when Venus led women to a dark pool in the woods and bade them look down into it and see what they should see, or perhaps more appropriately, since the time when Narcissus felt the fatal charm of reflection in loss of light, the mirror with its mystery of enchanting illusion has served the prophet, the magician, the poet and the artist. To make men see images of life, "as in a glass, darkly" has been the work of those classes of men (whose work has ever been in demand) who indeed but followed Nature with her mist wreaths, her mirage and dark reflecting waters.

But the pool, the river, the glassy ocean do not merely reproduce, they render, translate, choose. So with the true artist's mind. Hawthorne's was like Cornelius Agrippa's Magic Mirror, and in it he made men see pictured a shadowy life of the Puritans in the old New England towns which

"The Sea

Moans round with many voices."

His fancy was like a dark stream which with slightly ruffled surface alters proportions, and brings a distortion, which is yet harmonious, into the inverted world into which we peer from the banks; gives a twilight mystery to the dim background, the distorted and blasted growths of a witch-wood. And yet, as in the mirrored world, against the sad background an evening primrose or a tuft of pale asters may show with a beauty that seems new and miraculous, so in Hawthorne's stories a human flower stands out, blossoming, in spite of Fate. And the beauty heightened thereby, justifies the dark mystery that lies behind, like Hope at the bottom of Pandora's box. And again, as on her fatal box, in his rendering, Pandora thinks that, on a sudden turning, she detects passing smiles on the inscrutable carved face, whether of mockery or kindness she cannot tell, so here and there bits of humour creep out of the classic modelling of his romances. This image reappears in another form in the distorted faces ever forming in the cursed Spring. Grotesques most unexpectedly relieve the seriousness, as in the carvings of the cathedral.

How charmingly he slaps the Transcendentalists in his hint as to the uselessness of Lynceus on the Argo's prow as a look-out for near rocks because of his attention to sunken treasures hundreds of fathoms deep, of lands beyond the horizon; remember too the delightful proposal of the little Puritan children with regard to Hester Prynne's little daughter, "Go to! Let us cast stones at her!"—even the close observation of domestic matters shown in the description of the absurd hens with their wizened chickens, and of the fidgety reluctance and spasmodic jerkings of bureau-drawers,—everywhere the fun peeps quietly out from the story, as I have seen it from his eyes when he had recovered a little from his first shyness in dealing with young guests of his children.

Hawthorne's shyness drove him to cloistered life (except for his family), whether in Massachusetts, in England, or in Italy,—in spite of the anomaly of his having had a share of public life and functions. Perhaps because of this want of social experience he ventures little on conversation in his books. His skill is in painting successive pictures clothed in wonderful atmosphere, but yet allowing great distinctness and brilliancy at the focus, and this has to be supplemented by mind-reading, like the Interpreter's show to Christian in the "Pilgrim's Progress." Indeed one must steadily recur to the simile of a magician's glass. What does that mean however more than the gift of a consummate artist? The story does not move. We dally in a beautiful, or are spell-bound in a gloomy picture, and after a time one gives place to another until the story ends.

Lowell in his "Fable for Critics" thus explains the flower-like delicacy of Hawthorne's apparently robust personality—

"When Nature was shaping him, clay was not granted
For making so full-sized a man as she wanted;
So to fill out her model a little she spared
From some finer-grained stuff for a woman prepared;
And she couldn't have hit a more excellent plan
For making him fully and perfectly man."

LETTER

FROM THE HONORABLE JOSEPH HODGES CHOATE
UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR AT THE COURT OF ST. JAMES*

AMERICAN EMBASSY, LONDON.

10th June, 1904.

MY DEAR RANTOUL:

I was deeply sensible of the partial kindness of yourself and your Committee in asking me to attend and take part in the celebration of the Hawthorne Centennial at Salem, and I greatly regret that my public duties here forbade me to accept the flattering invitation.

I have done what I could to atone for my shortcomings, by gathering the brief tributes to your great author from the celebrated writers and critics, which will accompany this, as laurels to be laid upon his shrine—on the occasion of celebrating his hundredth birthday. These just appreciations by such eminent writers and persons as Henry James, Mrs. Humphry Ward, Andrew Lang, and James Bryce will be highly valued by all who are interested in Hawthorne.

Having done this, I supposed I should be exempt from further service, but you insist upon my adding a few words of my own. In doing so I shall leave criticism to the critics, having no skill or experience in that difficult art. I can only speak as a Salem man very proud of his nativity, who has always considered Hawthorne as the brightest jewel in Salem's crown, and who by a constant perusal of his fascinating books, has been helped to keep alive a warm feeling for his birthplace, which makes it always dear to him. Your city—our city, may I not say?—has produced many interesting and celebrated men in all the walks of public and of private life, but no one of them all, as it seems to me, has conferred upon it such lasting honor and renown, as he whose first century completed you are celebrating to-day, and the fame of his writings is strictly identified with the history and character of his native town—“Seven Grecian cities claimed great Homer dead, Through which the living Homer begged his bread—”

but there will never be any such contest about Hawthorne, for though Salem should perish from the face of the earth, though her ancient habitations should crumble to dust, and some great convulsion of nature submerge the place where she stood, her unique character and history would be kept alive for many generations by the writings of this her most gifted son. He was inspired in a most remarkable degree, by the genius loci,—the spirit of the place where he was born and bred, and his subtle mind was deeply saturated with the contemplation of its interesting annals.

Those fifteen years which, after graduating at Bowdoin, he spent in that dismal chamber in Herbert street, “where fame was won”—strange training and discipline for our most brilliant literary artist—must have been largely spent in the study of the history of Salem and of the Province of Massachusetts Bay. To his keen, discriminating and refining intellect all the incidents of our Colonial and later story had become as familiar as household words, and were really "Twice Told Tales." I know of no writer who has been so completely stamped for life by his environment. What to us are but faded reminiscences and traditions had become to him living and pleasant realities, as if his own eyes had witnessed them.

The landing of Endicott and his sturdy companions—the preaching of the saintly Higginson in the First Church—the long tramp through the woods of Winthrop, the great founder of a great State, from Boston to Salem, to visit his brethren—the ejection of Roger Williams, the first apostle of toleration, and his departure into the wilderness because the theological air of Salem was too strong for him—the brief careers of the doughty Hugh Peter and the gentle Sir Harry Vane, who both returned to England to lose their heads at the Restoration—the visits of the friendly Indians to the first settlers at the spring, where afterwards stood the town pump—and the cutting out by our stalwart Governor, of the cross, which in his narrow view defaced the Royal ensign—were all living facts deep seated in his historic vision.

But what haunted his imagination more than all else in our Colonial history, was the part which his first and second ancestors in Salem had taken, the one in the cruel persecution of the Quakers, and the other in the trial and execution of the Witches. Their conduct seemed to him to have cast a blight, as it were, upon their immediate descendants, and to have left a dark cloud upon the fair name of his birthplace. He studied the grim Puritans who walked your streets in the first century of the town, and treasured up many a picture that he found there for the illustration of his future works. But he did not limit his contemplation to the dark and sombre side of our history. He must have grown familiar with the later and more brilliant portion of our annals, with the very creditable conduct of Salem in Colonial days when she gave generous sympathy and support to Boston, unhappily closed for the time by the Boston Port Bill, and made common cause with the other towns and cities of the Colonies against the oppressive measures of Parliament. He knew how well she sustained her part through the Revolutionary struggle, the opening incident of which was Colonel Leslie's retreat at North Bridge. He knew with what courage and daring her merchants and seamen, among whom many of his ancestors in succession were counted, led the van in extending American Commerce in the Far East, rendering great service before the mast and on the quarter-deck, and bringing home cargoes that laid the foundation of many noble fortunes. He did not forget the achievements of our soldiers and sailors in the second war with England, so nobly represented by his heroic old chief in the Salem Custom House—that battered veteran—General Miller, who “tried” and succeeded, and whom he describes as “New England's most distinguished soldier.”

His inventive genius wove many of these local events and characters and traits into his fascinating romances—through each one of which there runs a delicate thread of mystery—which gives an absorbing interest to every subject that he touches—as the constant readers of the “Twice Told Tales,” “The House of the Seven Gables,” and the “Scarlet Letter,” with its satirical and rarely humorous preface can testify.

I know that his life in Salem was always sombre and solitary, and at times disheartening,—that he took no part in the social life of the place—standing aloof at all times from social contact, that he often left it and often returned, and that much of his best work was done elsewhere, but it was here, as he says himself, that fame was won. It was here that by the charming products of his pen, unappreciated at first, and struggling slowly into recognition, he won admission into the company of that famous group of writers, chief among whom were Emerson, Longfellow, Holmes, Lowell, and Whittier, who glorified New England, and made Boston the headquarters of American letters and learning. He was made welcome to the inner heart of that noble company, and who shall say that his fame will be less enduring than that of any of that illustrious group? that the wonderful power of imagination of this great writer of romance, which could transform the most commonplace subjects and incidents into enchanting legends and stories of the rarest merit, shall not carry his name as a familiar one to a distant posterity?

The writer of a great romance achieves a distinction more enviable and enduring than office or political reputation can confer. It may not compare with that of the founders of States, or of the greatest military heroes, or of the masters of science, who enlarge the boundaries of knowledge and discover new secrets of nature to be applied to the relief and service of man, but he who writes a good book to edify and delight his fellowmen for generation after generation is certainly a great benefactor of his age and country. Life is so full of labours and sorrows and bores, that he who relieves and lightens the load, by giving us a good and charming book, whose virtues time and chance cannot destroy, deserves well of his own generation and of those which come after.

It seems to me therefore wise and just that Salem as his birthplace, and the place where he worked his hard way to fame, should make the most of the Centennial of his birth, and should commend his writings to the next age as among the most precious of our National treasures. But, as one of his constant readers and admirers, I should not be content that this interesting occasion should be one of mere empty praise and adulation, however high the laurels may be heaped upon his head. I would have a more lasting monument erected to his memory, which should identify him to coming ages with the ancient city of his birth. I wish that the noblest statue of him which modern art can produce could mark the spot where his intellectual life and fame began. It should stand as nearly as possible on the exact site of the Town Pump, which the earliest effort of his genius made immortal. As he said himself, speaking for that personified benefactor of the city—

When I shall have decayed like my predecessors, then, if you revere my memory, let a marble fountain take my place upon this spot. . . In far antiquity beneath a darksome shadow of venerable boughs, a spring bubbled out of the leaf-strewn earth, in the very spot where you now behold me on the sunny pavement. The water was as bright and clear and deemed as precious as liquid diamonds. The Indian Sagamore drank of it from time immemorial till the fatal deluge of the fire-water burst upon the red men and swept their whole race away from the cold fountains. Endicott and his followers came next, and often knelt down to drink, dipping their long beards in the spring. The richest goblet then was of birch bark. Governor Winthrop, after a journey afoot from Boston, drank here out of the hollow of his hand, and the Elder Higginson here wet his palm and laid it on the forehead of the first town-born child.

Thus Hawthorne indicated the proper place for his monument on the spot where his genius first gushed forth. But let us surmount the marble fountain which he thus happily described, with a noble statue of himself, which shall convey to distant ages some worthy idea of the manly form and classic features of the man whom Salem to-day delights to honor. I should be much pleased to contribute towards such a monument, and so I am sure would hundreds of his fellow-townsmen at home and abroad. Many hands make light work, and if you who have inaugurated this occasion would set such a movement on foot, I am sure that it would succeed.

Wishing you every success in the celebration,

I remain,

Most truly,

LETTER

FROM THE RIGHT HONORABLE JAMES BRYCE

HOUSE OF COMMONS, LONDON.

June 10th, 1904.

DEAR MR. CHOATE :

Every one who loves literature will be glad to know that Salem is going to celebrate the memory of one of its most famous sons, who is also one of the greatest among American writers : and it gives me special pleasure to respond to your request for a few lines expressing, however briefly and imperfectly, what I feel about Nathaniel Hawthorne, because you are yourself sprung from that ancient and remarkable—I had almost said unique—New England city, a city not to be forgotten by whoever has seen it.

Hawthorne is certainly one of your greatest men of letters. Yet he is not distinctively American in the same sense as, for instance, Emerson is. Sometimes it is a note of greatness that a writer should not belong specially to any one country or any one time, but have that universal quality in his genius which makes his work appeal equally to countries and times not his own. Hawthorne does not seem, except (in a sense) by way of contrast, to carry one's thoughts to the New World. He was mostly occupied not with new but with old things. There is nothing in him of that rush and stress of American life, which even in his days travellers from Europe noted, contrasting it with the slower movement of Europe. I do not mean that he belonged to Europe, or to England in particular, rather than to America. He stands apart: he is a detached,—an isolated figure. He is not specifically and distinctly the child of any nation. Indeed he might have written in some other language than ours, though no doubt he would have written somewhat differently, for no one can help being affected by the form of speech he uses. And there is a sense in which he seems to belong not so much to the nineteenth century as to the eighteenth, the shadow of which was thrown upon his earlier years.

Yet there is an aspect of his genius which is indissolubly connected not only with America but with Salem. Salem is not only one of the oldest communities in New England: it is one of those which had in his day preserved—as indeed its older parts have not wholly lost—the most of an antique character. It recalled the grave, stern, rigidly ordered life of old Puritanism as few other spots did. It was the home of ecclesiastical traditions: it was full of associations from those days when religious ideas and usages ruled men's minds in a way we find it nowadays hard to realize. These associations tinged his imagination. They made him meditative and brooding. They filled with mystery the world in which he moved: they drew down the clouds of the Past into the sunshine of the Present. The power he had of making the past real and vivid, of bringing it into and rendering it a part of the present, is one of his most remarkable gifts. In this no writer of modern times has surpassed, and few have equalled him. It was a power independent of the conditions which first evoked it, for it is almost as fully displayed, perhaps even more winningly and romantically displayed, when he evokes the old joyous days of half-heathen Italy as when he carries us back into the more sombre foretime of Puritan Massachusetts.

He loved half lights. His figures seemed to move through an atmosphere of mystery, as in a dream. Yet he has also the gift, which at first sight might appear incompatible with that other gift, of grasping an idea or an emotion with extraordinary force, and setting it before us in a person, or in a dramatic situation, with a terrible intensity. The idea is dwelt upon and repeated in various forms till it seems to fill the sky and cover the horizon. This is perhaps the most characteristic mark of the energy of Hawthorne's imagination, as his capacity to create a weird and almost unearthly atmosphere is the characteristic mark of the peculiar quality by which, as by a rare and precious scent, we recall his work in our thought.

He is not a writer of fiction in the ordinary sense of the word, and troubles himself very little about plot or incident. He is rather a poet, who is occupied and penetrated with a passion for singular psychological problems ; strange phases of human feeling ; yet not morbid phases (for these are usually unfit for artistic treatment), but such rather as lie so deep and are so shadowy and dim as either to escape the notice of ordinary observers, or to baffle the descriptive power of ordinary writers. He does not use verse, but his diction has often all the richness and grace of poetry. He is a profound and subtle thinker, who thinks not many things, but much, and whose thoughts run always into an imaginative mould. He has left us but little, compared with some of his more facile contemporaries. But what he has left is nearly all of it golden ; and it will, if one may venture on prediction, be prized a century hence as we prize it now.

Believe me, sincerely yours,

JAMES BRYCE.

LETTER

FROM MRS. HUMPHRY WARD

STOCKS, TRING, ENGLAND.

June 8, 1904.

DEAR MR. CHOATE,—You have asked me to write you a few pages that, in the coming celebration at Salem of the hundredth anniversary of Nathaniel Hawthorne's birth, may be laid, with all the other tributes which the day will call forth, at the feet of Salem's famous son. It seems to me a great honour that you should have asked me to join in the homage of this anniversary; for the author of 'The Scarlet Letter' has always filled a place of peculiar sacredness and delight in my literary memory. So that to express my feeling of admiration and gratitude is only to give a voice to something long since conceived, to shape into some kind of utterance that which for many years has been an emotion and a force. For when I look back to the books which most strongly influenced my own youth, I am aware of a love for certain writings of Hawthorne, a love most ardent, and tenacious, which succeeded a passion of the same kind for certain writings of Mr. Ruskin. In both cases the devotion was hardly rational; it did not spring from any reasoned or critical appreciation of the books, for it dates from years when I was quite incapable of anything of the kind. It was the result, I think, of a vague, inarticulate sense of an appealing beauty, and a beauty so closely mingled with magic and mystery that it haunted memory 'like a passion.' Some scenes from 'The Scarlet Letter,' and some pages from 'The Stones of Venice,' haunted me in this way. And I can still sharply remember how much this early impression depended upon Hawthorne's austerity, upon his deep-rooted Puritanism, upon what has been often pointed to as 'the sense of sin' in him. Many of the short stories, no less than 'The Scarlet Letter,' and long before I truly understood them, used to awaken in me a sort of aching and painful joy, which was partly sympathy and partly rebellion. Again and again I have read over the scene between Hester, the minister, and Pearl, in the wood, insisting with myself that it must end with the flight and freedom of these tortured beings, and hardly able—though always conscious of its shadowy approach—to bear the moment when hope departs and Pearl brings back the fatal letter. So in the last scene, one of the most poignantly beautiful in literature, when Hester hangs over the dying minister and says to him: 'Shall we not meet again? Shall we not spend our immortal life together? surely, surely we have ransomed one another with all this woe! Thou lookest far into eternity with those bright dying eyes! Then tell me what thou seest?'—and the minister replies: 'Hush, Hester, hush! . . . I fear! I fear!'—the awe and shudder of such a last denial of hope has always remained with me as one of the greatest things of imagination, deriving its power from that stern spiritual energy which is its ultimate source.

So, in later years, 'Transformation,' with a still more daring combination of the same elements—Romantic beauty with Puritan austerity—exercised a like effect, spoke with the same exquisitely mingled voice. Kenyon and Hilda, set against Miriam and Donatello,—they are themselves the symbols of Hawthorne's genius, or rather of the strangely varied strands of which it was woven. For above all, and before all, it seems to me, he was a Romantic—a Romantic of the great time. He was born two years later than Victor Hugo; a year after the father of nineteenth-century Romanticism, Chateaubriand, had shown in the tale of 'Atala' the power of the American wilds to infuse new spells into the imagination of the Old World; and a year before the publication of 'The Lay of the Last Minstrel.' And whether at Salem or Boston, and long before his feet had trodden France or Italy, he shared to the full in the heritage of that generation, in its characteristic love of mystery and terror, which was also a passionate love of beauty; in its new perception of veiled and infinite horizons on the one hand, and in its sheer defiant delight, on the other, in the many-coloured detail, lovely or horrible, magnificent or grotesque, wherewith nature and man are always filling that small illuminated space amid the darkness, in which life revolves. How many instances might be given of the Romantic temper in Hawthorne!—the wonderful passage in the 'House of the Seven Gables' where Phœbe, before her eyes perceive him, is conscious in the shadowed room of Clifford's return; the grim vengeance of Roger Chillingworth; the appearance in the Catacombs of Miriam's mysterious persecutor; that swift murder on the Tarpeian rock; Hilda's confession in St. Peter's:—not to speak of such things as 'Malvin's Burial' or 'The Ambitious Guest' or 'Rappacini's Daughter,' each of them a Romantic masterpiece which may match with any other of a similar kind from the first or second generation of the European Romantics. Surprise, invention, mystery, an unfailing command, now of rich colour, now of things terrible or ironic, and now of a grace, half-toned and gentle as a spring day, combined with that story-teller's resource which is the gift of the gods alone:—these things we shall find in Hawthorne, just as we find them—some or all of them—in Hugo or Musset, in Gautier or Merimée.

But what a marvel of genius that it should be so! For while Victor Hugo's childhood and youth were passed first in Naples, then in Spain, and finally in the Paris of the Restoration, amid all that might fitly nourish the great poet who came to his own in 1830, Hawthorne's youth and early manhood, before the Brook Farm experience, were passed, as he himself tells us, in a country where there were 'no shadows, no antiquity, no mystery, no picturesque and gloomy wrong, nor anything but a commonplace prosperity in broad and simple daylight,'—in a town and a society, which had and could have nothing—or almost nothing—of those special incitements and provocations which, in the case of his European contemporaries, were always present. As to the books which may have influenced him, they do not seem to be easy to trace. But I remember a mention of Bürger's 'Lenore' in the 'Note-Books,' which links him with Scott's beginnings; and a reference to a translation he was making of a tale by Tieck gives me particular pleasure, because it connects him with our great English Romantic, Emily Brontë, who was reading Tieck just about the same time. Naturally in the thirties and forties a man of fine literary capacity, commanding French and German, and associated with Emerson, Longfellow, and Margaret Fuller, must have read the European books of the moment, and must have been stirred by the European ideas and controversies then affecting his craft. And indeed the love of the past, the love of nature, curiosity, freedom, truth, daring,—all these Romantic traits are Hawthorne's.

But what makes him so remarkable, so perennially interesting, is that he is a New-England—a Puritan Romantic; a Romantic with 'a sense of sin!' That is not how we shall any of us describe Victor Hugo, or George Sand, or Alfred de Musset! A French critic finds the inmost note and essence of Romanticism in that mad glorification of the 'I,' which in the wilder Romantics set all laws, æsthetic or moral, at defiance. M. Brunetière must be wrong! Hawthorne's genius is enough to prove it. For in his case the Romantic instinct finds its chief food in what seem to him at all times the majestic verities and sanctions of the moral life and those not the verities and sanctions of the individual conscience merely, as George Sand might have enforced them, but the plain matters of ordinary law and custom, as the plain man understands them. His attitude is the Pauline one, 'the strength of sin is the law,' and it is in the vengeance or the triumph of law that he is perpetually seeking and finding his noblest artistic effects. He moralises perpetually, and his danger of course is the didactic danger, wherein he differs from your other great Romantic, Edgar Allan Poe, whose danger is that of morbid excess and extravagance, as with so many European writers of the movement. But Hawthorne is saved, first by poetry, and then by his perpetual love of and interest in the common life. The preacher indeed is ultimately absorbed in the poet, and his final aim is not reform but beauty—the eternal immortalising aim of the artist. While for him, also, the spectacle of human character and human suffering is in itself so absorbing, that he is able to communicate his vision to us, just because his touch is so disinterested and true,—so free indeed from that preoccupation with the 'I' which we are told to regard as typically Romantic. 'He liked' it has been said, 'to fraternize with plain people, to take them on their own terms, and put himself, if possible into their shoes.' There indeed is the wide sympathy of the poet, the surest condition of abiding work. The 'Note-Books' are full of it. 'The strange fellow in the bar-room—a sort of mock Methodist—a cattle drover,' whose talk turned upon religion 'while quaffing fourteen cups of tea;' 'the man with a smart horse,' who, when congratulated upon it, replies gaily that he 'has a better at home;' the blacksmith, whose conversation has much 'strong unlettered sense,' imbued with 'humour,' than whom 'I know no man who seems more like a man, more indescribably human,'—the surgeon dentist, the school teacher, the travelling actor, the dogs, the horses,—all parts and all figures and accessories of the human play, as he sees it, are equally delightful to him,—all enter into that heightened illuminated feeling whereof the fruit in literature is such a story as 'The Seven Vagabonds,' or such a novel as that which tells the story of the Pyncheons.

Thus, with Beauty haunting his path, 'an hourly visitant,' and all the intricacies of human character for subject, did Hawthorne shape himself, through the long years at Salem, and through the drudgeries of his Custom House post, into the ever-delightful artist he now appears to us,—an artist whose place grows larger and more certain as the days roll on, and, in the quiet of our after-judgment, he and the other great ones of his day rise to the honour which is duly theirs. 'On the pure horizon far' we see his star shining beside its fellows, and we know it for one of those lights of poetry which live when other lights grow dim, let the years fleet as they may.

Forgive these too hasty thoughts. They are meant only as the dropping of a rose on your poet's grave—nothing more!

LETTER

FROM HENRY JAMES

RYE, SUSSEX, ENGLAND.

June 10, 1904.

DEAR SIR:

I much regret my being able to participate only in that spirit of sympathy that makes light of distance—that defies difference of latitude and hemisphere—in the honours you are paying, at his birthplace, to the beautiful genius to whom Salem owes the most precious gift perhaps that an honest city may receive from one of her sons—the gift of a literary association high enough in character to emerge thus brilliantly from the test of Time. How happily it has lasted for you, and why it has lasted—this flower of romantic art, never to become a mere desiccated specimen, that Hawthorne interwove with your sturdy annals,— I shall attempt, by your leave, briefly to say; but your civic pride is at any rate fortunate in being able to found your claim to have contributed to the things of the mind on a case and a career so eminent and so interesting. The spirit of such occasions is always, on the spot, communicative and irresistible; full of the amenity of each man's—and I suppose still more of each woman's—scarce distinguishing, in the general friendliness, between the loan of enthusiasm and the gift, between the sound that starts the echo and the echo that comes back from the sound. But being present by projection of the mind, present afar off and under another sky, that has its advantages too—for other distinctions, for lucidity of vision and a sense of the reasons of things. The career commemorated may perhaps so be looked at, over a firm rest, as through the telescope that fixes it, even to intensity, and helps it to become, as we say, objective—and objective not strictly to cold criticism, but to admiration and wonder themselves, and even, in a degree, to a certain tenderness of envy. The earlier scene, now smothered in flowers and eloquence and music, possibly hangs before one rather more, under this perspective, in all its parts—with its relation, unconscious at the time, to the rare mind that had been planted in it as in a parent soil, and with the relation of that mind to its own preoccupied state, to the scene itself as enveloping and suggesting medium: a relation, this latter, to come to consciousness always so much sooner, so much more nervously, so much more expressively, than the other! By which I mean that there is, unfortunately for the prospective celebrity, no short cut possible, on the part of his fellow-townsmen, to the expensive holiday they are keeping in reserve for his name. It is there, all the while—somewhere in the air at least, even while he lives; but they cannot get at it till the Fates have forced, one by one, all the locks of all the doors and crooked passages that shut it off; and the celebrity meantime, by good luck, can have little idea what is missing.

I at all events almost venture to say that, save for the pleasure of your company, save for that community of demonstration which is certainly a joy in itself, I could not wish to be better placed than at this distance for a vision of the lonely young man that Hawthorne then was, and that he was in fact pretty well always to remain, dreaming his dreams, nursing his imagination, feeling his way, leading his life, intellectual, personal, economic, in the place that Salem then was, and becoming, unwittingly and unsuspectedly, with an absence of calculation fairly precious for the final effect, the pretext for the kind of recognition you greet him with to-day. It is the addition of all the limitations and depressions and difficulties of genius that makes always—with the factor of Time thrown in—the sum total of posthumous glory. We see, at the end of the backward vista, the restless unclassified artist pursue the immediate, the pressing need of the hour, the question he is not to come home to his possibly uninspiring hearth-stone without having met—we see him chase it, none too confidently, through quite familiar, too familiar streets, round well-worn corners that don't trip it up for him, or into dull doorways that fail to catch and hold it; and then we see, at the other end of the century, these same streets and corners and doorways, these quiet familiarities, the stones he trod, the objects he touched, the air he breathed, positively and all impatiently waiting to bestow their reward, to measure him out success, in the great, in the almost superfluous, abundance of the eventual! This general quest that Hawthorne comes back to us out of the old sunny and shady Salem, the blissfully homogeneous community of the forties and fifties, as urged to by his particular, and very individual, sense of life, is that of man's relation to his environment seen on the side that we call, for our best convenience, the romantic side: a term that we half the time, nowadays, comfortably escape the challenge to define precisely because "The Scarlet Letter" and "The House of the Seven Gables" have made that possible to us under cover of mere triumphant reference to them. That is why, to my sense, our author's Salem years and Salem impressions are so interesting a part of his development. It was while they lasted, it was to all appearance under their suggestion, that the romantic spirit in him learned to expand with that right and beautiful felicity that was to make him one of its rarest representatives. Salem had the good-fortune to assist him, betimes, to this charming discrimination—that of looking for romance near at hand, and where it grows thick and true, rather than on the other side of the globe and in the Dictionary of Dates. We see it, nowadays, more and more, inquired and bargained for in places and times that are strange and indigestible to us ; and for the most part, I think, we see those who deal in it on these terms come back from their harvest with their hands smelling, under their brave leather gauntlets, or royal rings, or whatever, of the plain domestic blackberry, the homeliest growth of our actual dusty waysides. These adventurers bring home, in general, simply what they have taken with them, the mechanical, at best the pedantic, view of the list of romantic properties. The country of romance has been for them but a particular spot on the map, coloured blue or red or yellow—they have to take it from the map ; or has been this, that or the other particular set of complications, machinations, coincidences or escapes, this, that or the other fashion of fire-arm or cutlass, cock of hat, frizzle of wig, violence of scuffle or sound of expletive : mere accidents and outward patches, all, of the engaging mystery—no more of its essence than the brass band at a restaurant is of the essence of the dinner. What was admirable and instinctive in Hawthorne was that he saw the quaintness or the weirdness, the interest behind the interest, of things, as continuous with the very life we are leading, or that we were leading—you, at Salem, certainly were leading—round about him and under his eyes ; saw it as something deeply within us, not as something infinitely disconnected from us ; saw it in short in the very application of the spectator's, the poet's mood, in the kind of reflection the things we know best and see oftenest may make in our minds. So it is that such things as "The Seven Gables," "The Blithedale Romance," "The Marble Faun," are singularly fruitful examples of the real as distinguished from the artificial romantic note. Here "the light that never was on land or sea" keeps all the intimacy and yet adds all the wonder. In the first two of the books I have named, especially, the author has read the romantic effect into the most usual and contemporary things—arriving by it at a success that, in the Seven Gables perhaps supremely, is a marvel of the free-playing, yet ever unerring, never falsifying instinct. We have an ancient gentlewoman reduced to keep a shop ; a young photographer modestly invoking fortune ; a full-fed, wine-flushed "prominent citizen" asleep in his chair ; a weak-minded bachelor spending his life under the shadow of an early fault that has not been in the least heroic ; a fresh New England girl of the happy complexion of thousands of others—we have, thrown together, but these gently-persuasive challenges to mystification, yet with the result that they transport us to a world in which, as in that of Tennyson's Lotus-Eaters, it seems always afternoon. And somehow this very freedom of the spell remains all the while truth to the objects observed—truth to the very Salem in which the vision was born. Blithedale is scarcely less fine a case of distinction conferred, the curiosity and anxiety dear to the reader purchased, not by a shower of counterfeit notes, simulating munificence, but by that artistic economy which understands values and uses them.

The book takes up the parti-coloured, angular, audible, traceable Real, the New England earnest, aspiring, reforming Real, scattered in a few frame-houses over a few stony fields, and so invests and colours it, makes it rich and strange—and simply by finding a felicitous tone for it—that its characters and images remain for us curious winged creatures preserved in the purest amber of the imagination.

All of which leads me back to what I said, to begin with, about our romancer's having borne the test of Time. I mentioned that there is a reason, in particular, why he has borne it so well, and I think you will recognize with me, in the light of what I have tried to say, that he has done so by very simply, quietly, slowly and steadily, becoming for us a Classic. If we look at the real meaning of our celebration to-day, ask ourselves what is at the back of our heads or in the bottom of our hearts about it, we become conscious of that interesting process and eloquent plea of the years on Hawthorne's behalf—of that great benefit, that effect of benevolence, for him, from so many of the things the years have brought. We are in the presence thus of one of the happiest opportunities to see how a Classic comes into being, how three such things as the Scarlet Letter, the Gables and Blithedale—to choose only a few names where I might choose many—acquire their final value. They acquire it, in a large measure, by the manner in which later developments have worked in respect to them—and, it is scarce too much to say, acquire it in spite of themselves and by the action of better machinery than their authors could have set in motion, stronger (as well as longer!) wires than their authors could have pulled. Later developments, I think, have worked in respect to them by contrast—that is the point—so much more either than by a generous emulation or by a still more generous originality. They have operated to make the beauty—the other beauty—delicate and noble, to throw the distinction into relief. The scene has changed and everything with it—the pitch, and the tone, and the quantity, and the quality, above all; reverberations are gained, but proportions are lost; the distracted Muse herself stops her ears and shuts her eyes: the brazen trumpet has so done its best to deafen us to the fiddle-string. But to the fiddle-string we nevertheless return; it sounds, for our sense, with the slightest lull of the general noise—such a lull as, for reflection, for taste, a little even for criticism, and much, certainly, for a legitimate complacency, our present occasion beneficently makes. Then it is that such a mystery as that of the genius we commemorate may appear a perfect example of the truth that the state of being a classic is a comparative state—considerably, generously, even when blindly, brought about, for the author on whom the crown alights, by the generations, the multitudes worshipping other gods, that have followed him. He must obviously have been in himself exquisite and right, but it is not to that only, to being in himself exquisite and right, that any man ever was so fortunate as to owe the supreme distinction. He owes it more or less, at the best, to the relief in which some happy, some charming combination of accidents has placed his intrinsic value. This combination, in our own time, has been the contagion of the form that we may, for convenience, and perhaps, as regards much of it, even for compliment, call the journalistic—so pervasive, so ubiquitous, so unprecedentedly prosperous, so wonderful for outward agility, but so unfavourable, even so fatal, to development from within. Hawthorne saw it—and it saw him—but in its infancy, before these days of huge and easy and immediate success, before the universal, the overwhelming triumph of the monster. He had developed from within—as to feeling, as to form, as to sincerity and character. So it is, as I say, that he enjoys his relief, and that we are thrown back, by the sense of difference, on his free possession of himself. He lent himself, of course, to his dignity—by the way the serious, in him, flowered into the grace of art; but our need of him, almost quite alone as he stands, in one tray of the scales of Justice, would add, if this were necessary, to the earnestness of our wish to see that he be undisturbed there. Vigilance, in the matter, however, assuredly, is happily not necessary! The grand sign of being a classic is that when you have “passed,” as they say at examinations, you have passed; you have become one once for all; you have taken your degree and may be left to the light and the ages.

HON. ROBERT S. RANTOUL.

AN APPRECIATION OF HAWTHORNE

BY ANDREW LANG

A hundred years after the birth of an author, the world of letters knows whether he is to be reckoned among the classics of his native language. A century has passed since Nathaniel Hawthorne was born, and, as to his claims to being a classic of the art of Fiction in English, there cannot be a doubt. He lived in an age remarked for its great writers, many of them novelists. Of these, how many maintain, or have even increased, like Hawthorne, the measure of repute which they received in their life-time? Hawthorne was but ten years old when Waverley appeared, and made Fiction the popular art of the century. Before Hawthorne was thirty, Fenimore Cooper first gave to Europe the assurance of an American novelist. At this time Hawthorne had written his early tales, and remained "the obscurest man of letters" in his own country, so he said, though, if he had done no more, every critic of ordinary sense would now recognize the presence of more than promise, of great and original qualities, in his Twice Told Tales. But, by reason of his own modesty, his Scarlet Letter did not appear till 1850, when he was older than Scott was at the date of the publication of Waverley. Good trees have seldom borne good first fruits so late, but the fruits are imperishable. Of his contemporaries, in his art, it may be said that none but Thackeray, Dickens, Poe, and perhaps Charlotte Brontë, have that enduring excellence which marks the classic as distinguished from the favorite of a year, or a few years.

Hawthorne's motive was the old Puritan sense of sin, the old Puritan certainty and solemnity about Life, Death, and Judgment,—removed out of the region of religion and ethics into the region of art. The worm that never dies gnaws the hearts of his protagonists in The Scarlet Letter, a man and a woman of passionate pleasure-loving natures; the woman strong; the man weak, but entirely isolated, and lonely in the stern commonwealth where Fate has brought them: apart from their neighbours as much as if they were witches or Red Indians. This kind of motive pervades the shorter tales, as if Hawthorne were expiating, in art, the forgotten sins of unremembered ancestors.

The moment had come when the sense of sin could thus be disengaged, and used as material of fiction, as Lockhart, a descendant of Covenanters, used it, with oddly similar effect, in Adam Blair. A soft gloom, not without a rich glow of autumnal colour, pervades the atmosphere of the genius of Hawthorne. The child Pearl leaps and grimaces in the glow of gold and scarlet from her mother's brand of shame. The darkness of a world lying in sin and the terror of witchcraft surround this elfin child of genius, as the musty stillness of the House of the Seven Gables shrouds the waning beauty of Clifford; as the darkness of the Catacombs encircles the joyous Faun, and the enigmatic Miriam. For effects of twilight-shades with a spot of glowing light and colour, the art of Hawthorne resembles that of Rembrandt, but the colours are deeper, richer, more glorious. Other novelists work in the light and dark of common day; not so Hawthorne, who is so great a colourist that one naturally thinks of him in the terms of the art of painting. His atmospheric effects appear more memorable than his characters, so many of them are creatures of allegory, like Miriam and Hilda, rather than portraits from real life, like Judge Pyncheon. There were, though few remember it, originals for Miriam, and for the cloaked shape from the Catacombs who haunts her, and who left, in fact, a distinct stain on the noblesse of France. A hideous tragedy of actual existence created the gloom that swallows up Donatello, just as the "dark backward" of Puritanism frames the lovers of the Scarlet Letter.

In England, Hawthorne might have found "atmosphere" enough: the State Trials, he said, presented him with some fifty plots for novels. But he was prematurely fatigued; he did not make the best of both hemispheres. Yet he left plots and ideas enough for a generation of novelists in his note books, as a great artist leaves his boxes of colours. There is nobody who can mix and use them: none to blend them on the canvas. Hawthorne was absolutely unique, and it may not be premature to say that he was the greatest of the great generation of American men of letters which numbered among its children Poe, Emerson, Longfellow, Lowell, Whittier and Holmes. His worldly reward was not great, but he gained "the immortal crown that is to be run for, not without heat and dust". He was a master of Romance, and of Romance of a new kind, which no age shall see revived or re-created; he was "The Great Magician" of the West. He dwelt, and brought us to dwell in a kingdom magical of his own, and the key to that realm is given forever "to the Kelpie's keeping."

AN ESTIMATE OF HAWTHORNE

BY DOCTOR ANTON E. SCHÖNBACH
OF THE UNIVERSITY OF GRATZ

“I think the marked superiority of Hawthorne’s works consists in the combination of thorough, accurate, psychological development of characters and problems with clearest objectivity and a sane and happy modern realism. This gives rise, incidentally, to a delicate, subtle humor, sometimes hidden simply in an adjective or a little phrase which throws a soft and hopeful light on the saddest situation. Not the least of the qualities which I admire in him is the charm of his diction, its purity, its melody, its graceful plasticity, the rich vocabulary, the elegance which only rarely shows the marks of revision. Next to George Eliot, or rather with her, Hawthorne is the first English prose writer of the nineteenth century. At the same time, however, he has lost none of his peculiar American individuality. Not only when he penetrates into the most secret and inmost emotions of the life of old colonial days as no other has done, and portrays the spirit of his ancestors with a strength of intuition as no historical writer could do, but in all his other writings, from the biography of General Pierce to the Marble Faun, Hawthorne shows the vigor and the keenness, the precision and the clearness and the other qualities of American literature which cannot yet be exactly defined. He is its best representative.”

Such was my decision on concluding a study of Nathaniel Hawthorne which was later (1900) published in a volume of my Essays (pp. 270-347). To-day I may add that the development of American literature during the last decade proves more and more conclusively that Nathaniel Hawthorne is its chief patron. The need of the Americans to find in fiction relief from the terribly irritating stress and strain of daily life makes them follow with delight the bold flights of an imagination which escapes the bounds of reality, wilder flights than Hawthorne in his most fanciful moments ever dared. But, besides, there exists in the modern narrative literature of the United States the fully justified endeavor to understand and to appreciate soberly the reality of life, to seek to introduce it into fiction, together with the continually widening horizon of the American people, as a manifest picture of the universe. If, together with that, North America's novels and romances to-day prove themselves the rightful heirs of her principal writer of fiction, a distant and calm observer can wish for the great nation on the other side of the ocean nothing better at the centenary of Nathaniel Hawthorne than that, from the pure morals and lofty idealism of this man, a strong and austere breath of fresh life may ever be wafted through the American literature of the future.

LETTER FROM J. M. BARRIE

LEINSTER CORNER,
LANCASTER GATE, W.
5 Dec., 1903.

DEAR MR. RANTOUL:

I have very pleasant memories of that visit to Salem and of the hospitalities you showed us on that occasion. I make no doubt that Hawthorne is your greatest man of letters,—I mean America's—and the ground he trod must always be hallowed ground to all who love the immortal in literature. When you honor his centenary I shall be there in mind,—among the thousands,—all with our hats off.

Yours sincerely,
J. M. BARRIE.

LETTER FROM MRS. HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD

HOTEL D'ILENA, PARIS.
May thirtieth, 1904.

MY DEAR MR. RANTOUL:

You are very kind to ask me, at this distance, to assist in the celebration of Hawthorne's memory,—and I wish that I might do so. But your letter finds me when it is too late to be just to the occasion, even were that at any time possible for me.

Knowing Hawthorne, although but slightly, through my husband's friendship with him, I have felt that personally, as well as in his work, he held more of the Divine breath than has been given to other Immortals,—or, at any rate, of a wholly different quality. For he was absolutely unique. His genius might have a rival in that of the creator of Sintram and Undine, if it were not for the magnetic charm of a subtle and evasive humor that plays through its gloom like sparks in ashes, and makes it individual. He was a creature of the dark, mysterious north, where it is night half the year, and whose wizardry is more than that against which his forbears fought. In him the smouldering ember of witchcraft burnt at last to a flame whose spirit was that of the shifting, evanescent but everlasting, lustre of the aurora.

I know that you feel, as all the people of our County do, that it is a proud day for old Essex when she honors the memory of this man who walked half unknown in her borders, but who sheds on her beloved fame a new glory.

With repeated thanks for the kindness of your letter, dear Mr. Rantoul, believe me

Cordially your neighbor,

HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD.

MY DEAR SIR :

I beg to acknowledge, with thanks, your courteous invitation for Thursday, 23rd inst., and though unable to attend, I cannot forbear expressing my deepest sympathy with the Commemorative purposes of your Institute. Pray count me among the sincerest admirers of your great townsman, whose fame has taken on a quality—so large, so fixed, and so fine—that no celebration can extend or brighten it.

Very cordially yours,

LETTER

FROM EDMUND C. STEDMAN *

Lawrence Park, Bronxville, N. Y.

May 18, 1804.

MY DEAR SIR:

• • • The fact is that I am embarrassed by my inability to add anything to the tribute which I paid to the genius of Hawthorne before the Phi Beta Kappa Chapter of Harvard in 1877. That production was so near my heart that I made it the title-piece of a little volume published in the ensuing Autumn. Before your letter arrived I had two invitations to join in Hawthorne observances in other towns, and had replied that I must be excused. Of course a request from Salem would be to me far more compulsive. But I cannot be with you in person on the poetic and significant occasion for which you are preparing.

When my tribute was delivered, there were present, on the stage of the Sanders Theatre, Emerson—then pass-into the cloud—Longfellow—Whittier—Holmes—Lowell, who spoke afterwards at the Phi Beta Kappa Dinner—the whole New England pleiad, as you see. And I never forget the face of Rose Hawthorne, then in all her young sentiment and beauty, as she listened to me from the audience. No! I cannot add to my metrical utterance concerning Hawthorne, but I am grateful for your invitation, and I am glad that the City forever associated with his genius will not fall below her obligations and her fame on the approaching centenary.

*From the many letters received in connection with the Centennial, the following have been selected for preservation in this Report.

I am with respect,

Very truly yours,

EDMUND C. STEDMAN.

HON. ROBERT S. RANTOUL.

Turning to this fine heart-tribute—the Phi Beta Kappa Poem—we find the great enchanter apostrophized as :

The one New-Englander! Upon whose page
Thine offspring still are animate, and move
Adown thy paths, a quaint and stately throng :
Grave men of God who made the olden law,
Fair maidens, meet for love,—
All living types that to the coast belong
Since Carver from the prow thy headlands saw.

* * *

Two natures in him strove
Like day with night, his sunshine and his gloom.
To him the stern forefathers' creed descended,
The weight of some inexorable Jove
Prejudging from the cradle to the tomb ;
But therewithal the lightsome laughter blended
Of that Arcadian sweetness undismayed
Which finds in Love its law, and graces still
The rood, the penitential symbol worn,—
Which sees, beyond the shade,
The Naiad nymph of every rippling rill,
And hears quick Fancy wind her wilful horn.

* * *

But he whose quickened eye
Saw through New England's life her inmost spirit,—
Her heart and all the stays on which it leant,— Returns not, since he laid the pencil by Whose mystic touch none other shall inherit!
What though its work unfinished lies? Half-bent
The rainbow's arch fades out in upper air;
The shining cataract half-way down the height
Breaks into mist; the haunting strain, that fell
On listeners unaware,
Ends incomplete, but through the starry night
The ear still waits for what it did not tell.

LETTER

FROM WILLIAM ROSCOE THAYER

York Harbor, Maine.

July 15, 1904.

DEAR MR. RANTOUL :

· · · Mr. Crothers, I thought, gave the most interesting analysis of Hawthorne's religious position ; indeed, his essay seems to me to be the best that the Centenary has called out. I was glad that he showed the radical difference between Calvinism and the moral world which Hawthorne describes. May the old confusion, which made Hawthorne the interpreter of Puritanism, never be revived.

· · · If I had written or spoken on Hawthorne, I should have laid great stress on what seems to me to have been his rarest gift—his art. Among all the master novelists of the nineteenth century he and Turgueneff alone can be compared to the Greeks for the beauty, symmetry, compactness and finish of their work. The Scarlet Letter is a small volume—how small when you put it beside Les Misérables or David Copperfield or Vanity Fair—but it is complete. It has nothing superfluous : it lacks nothing. Other masters of fiction have certainly equalled Hawthorne in many qualities,—some of them have talents which he did not possess. His art-criticism was uncultivated (witness his exaltation of Story's Cleopatra) but often illuminating ; his intuitive genius served him in place of acquired information, as in his power to divine the influence of the Church of Rome on Hilda ; and his descriptions of Roman scenes and of Italian landscapes have not been matched by any or all the hosts of word-painters who have tried their hand at that work in the past fifty years. But he, in possessing this transcendent gift of artistic perfection, stands apart among modern writers of fiction in English. This gift most deserves to be studied, and to be imitated,—so far as genius can be imitated,—for the tendency of our age is towards diffuseness, the substitution of many words for few thoughts, the mistaking of the casual for the essential.

It is this in Hawthorne to which too much attention can never be called, and I shall be glad if the renewed interest in him which the Centenary has kindled may have the result of leading more of our younger writers to follow his example.

Let me tell you how much I enjoyed the Celebration, which was worthy of the genius whom Salem bore and the whole English-speaking world honors.

Ever very truly yours,

WM. R. THAYER.

LETTER

FROM MRS. ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS WARD

Newton Centre, Mass.

June 24th., 1904

MY DEAR SIR:

Will you be so kind as to convey to the managers of the Hawthorne Celebration my sincere regret that I was forced to be silent at the occasion which did honor to his memory yesterday?

I received an invitation however to express my sympathy with the anniversary. It came when I was too ill to pay attention to it, and when I became able to do so, it had disappeared, and—I suppose—has never even been acknowledged. I could not so much as identify the occasion and it was not until I read of the success of your celebration that I was able to answer at all—not knowing before where to answer, or what the matter was which I had been unfortunately obliged to neglect. It can do no good now, except to console my own consciousness of a pleasure missed to write and tell you now profoundly I honor the genius of Salem's great citizen. Hawthorne has no superiors if any equals in American fiction, and it is an honor to any writer of our lesser and lighter day to do honor to his memory.

I am Sir,

Very truly yours,

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS WARD.

HON. ROBERT S. RANTOUL.

AN ACCOUNT

OF THE FIRST REUNION OF THE DESCENDANTS OF
MAJOR WILLIAM, AND JOHN HATHORNE HELD
AT SALEM, MASS., JUNE 23, 1904

The Hathorne Family, descendants of Major William and of John Hathorne, held its first reunion in the Parish House of the Second Church at Salem, in the forenoon of June 23, 1904, under the auspices of the Old Planters' Society.

The Honorable Henry C. Leach, in behalf of that Society, called the gathering to order at half past ten, and said :

As Chairman of a committee appointed by the Old Planters' Society it is my pleasant duty to preside over this gathering of the descendants of William and John Hathorne who have accepted our invitation to unite in Commemorative Services to be held to-day, under the direction of the Essex Institute, in honor of the birth of your illustrious kinsman Nathaniel Hawthorne, one hundred years ago. It was thought by the Committee who have honored me by placing me in this position, that no more fitting time or place could be found in which the kinsmen of Nathaniel Hawthorne might arrange for a Hawthorne Family Organization, than in this City of his birth and on the hundredth anniversary of that event.

It seemed also fitting that you should receive from the President of the Old Planters' Society, and from the President of the Essex Institute, both of them lineal descendants of the earliest Puritan founders of Massachusetts, a cordial welcome to this gathering, to the exercises of the day, and to the city of Salem.

Mr. Leach then presented Col. Thomas Wentworth Higginson, President of the Old Planters' Society.

Col. Higginson said that he had a right to welcome the Hathornes to Salem for his ancestors were here before them, and the Reverend Francis Higginson, who landed here in 1629, and gave the place its present name, received a grant of land on Salem Neck, and his son, the Reverend John, preached here for fifty years, and lies buried in the Bradstreet tomb in Charter Street. There were business relations and land transfers between the Higginsons and the Hathornes. Both families had borne an honorable share in founding and building up the wonderful commerce of Salem's golden age, and the famous ship-masters who made Salem known in two wars and in half a century of peace counted among them both Higginsons and Hathornes. But the Hathornes needed no welcome to Salem. They had enjoyed the freedom of the town in their own right too long to need anybody's welcome. He wished them every success in their reunion.

The Chair then presented Mr. Rantoul to speak for the Essex Institute. The speaker said that Hawthorne had one rare quality which, he thought, should be more generally noted and commended, and it might be called the literary, or æsthetic, or artistic conscience that he was endowed with,—a lofty, ideal standard of possible quality in his work, which would not permit him to slight it,—to which his loyalty was absolute,—which made it impossible for him to part with a sheet of his manuscript so long as there was a chance of improving what he had written on it. No pressure of affairs, no untoward surroundings, no exigent demands, furnished to Hawthorne's mind an excuse for anything short of supreme effort towards perfecting whatever left his hands. And the statement somewhere made that he burned three times as much finished manuscript as he ever printed, was probably within the fact.

The spelling of the name, the speaker said, seemed to be a stumbling-block to some people. The name has been spelled in this Country,—Mr. Waters finds that it has been spelled in the old Country,—in its earlier as well as in its later usage, Hawthorne, Hauthorne, Horthorne, Harthorne, Hathorne; and so on, with or without the final "e" indifferently. Of the final "e" no account need be taken. Hathorne has been the common spelling in this neighborhood. Hawthorne is as early a variation of the name as any yet found, and when the Romancer, at some date later than March 30, 1826,—for on that date he scratched his name "Hathorne" with a diamond ring on a window pane of the old Herbert Street Chamber,—when the Romancer finally adopted the form "Hawthorne," it was rather in the way of restoration or revival than of innovation or a new departure.

The name has been variously sounded. If WA-ter spells water, why may not HA-thorne be sounded Hawthorne? The common sound of the name hereabouts has been Hath-orne and Har-thorne. But these changes in sound and spelling have no significance in a period when there was no common standard at hand to which everybody could refer,—no dictionary, no daily press,—when a rude phonetic system prevailed and, as has been wittily said, "the spelling of the English language was a matter of private judgment." My own name, said the speaker, has been variously sounded, and it is spelled "Rentall," in September, 1793, in Col. Benjamin Pickman's account of Essex street in Salem. Other instances are familiar. Crowninshield was Grunsell within a century, and in earlier years Poindexter became Pudeator, and Blancpied became Blumpy.

Somewhere and at some time the name had an origin or derivation. It is highly probable that the family derived its name from the name of the tree. This gathering would seem to show that the Hawthorn Tree was a green and vigorous family-tree to be derived from. But how came the tree or bush known as "Hawthorn" to bear a name formed of just that combination of letters? The lexicographers say that the name of the tree or bush is a compound of the word "thorn" with a word derived from a Saxon or Dutch or Danish root from which the word "hedge" is also formed. Hawthorn, they suppose, was merely the name of a thorn-bush anciently as well as now used in hedging.

But the spelling of the tree-name is as erratic as is that of the family name. In a very ancient ballad entitled "A merey Ballet of the Hathorne Tre," in Child's Collection of old English verse, occur these lines :

"It was a maide of my Countrè,

"As she cam by a hathorne-tre,"

And Chaucer, in his "Knyghte's Tale," of about A. D. 1387, has these lines :

"To maken him a gerlond of the greves,

"Were it of wodebind or of Hauthorn leves."

But I ought not, the speaker said, to take more of your time, for I want you to be able to visit and inspect thoroughly the Institute's collection of Hawthorne relics, the like of which will never be seen again.

The Chairman called on Henry F. Waters for some remarks and he said :

After the literary treat of which you have partaken with such evident pleasure now comes the contribution of the Dry-as-dust,—the antiquary,—the delver among musty records, whose function it is, on this occasion, to present to you certain plain facts as evidence bearing upon the problem of the English ancestry of Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Up to the time of my first visit to England in 1879 we had no actual knowledge of the parentage or place of nativity of Major William Hathorne, the ancestor of the Salem line of this family, and his brother John Hathorne, the progenitor of the Lynn branch. I had seen once or twice, in print, a statement made, based upon no recognized good authority and unfortified by any evidence, that the “family seat” (so-called) was in Wiltshire, England. But I had also found, what was far more important, the evidence that they had a brother Robert living in Bray, in old England, and that our Lieut. Richard Davenport was a brother-in-law by marriage with a sister of theirs. A Bill of Exchange, dated 19 : 10 : 1651, for one hundred pounds, was drawn by William Hawthorne of Salem on a Mr. Robert Hathorne payable “at Mr. John Winche’s on Ludgate hill London,” and in an Account Current it was referred to as a “Bill of Exchange on my brother, paid by Mr. Winch.” There was also a letter from Robert to his brother William ending thus :

“ Good brother,—remember my love to my sister, my brother John and sister, my brother Davenport and my sister and the rest of our friends.

“ In hast I rest

“ Your loueing brother

“ ROBERT HATHORNE.

“From Bray this 1 Aprill, 1653.”

Endorsed—“To your very Loueing Friend Wm. Hathorne” and directed “ffor Mr. Tinker at Mr. William Willsheer’s house, Ironmunger, in Bredstreet in London. To his loueing brother Mr. William Hathorne at Salem in New England deliver this.”

These important bits of information may be found in the New-England Historical and Genealogical Register, Vol. XII, page 295, and Vol. XXIX, page 112. Besides this I had examined the records in the County Court House in Salem and found enough to lead to the hypothesis that the “brother Davenport” mentioned in the letter was Richard Davenport, who was of Salem until 1642, when he removed to Boston, being appointed Captain of the Castle there, as we are told by Savage, and who was killed by lightning, 15 July, 1665.

Armed with the above information I began my researches in London more than a quarter of a century ago. My search was by no means exhaustive, for the name of Hathorne was only one of the many names of the first settlers that I was bearing in mind and I simply took down such notes as seemed to me likely to bear upon the ancestry of any one of them whenever I came across them in the course of my rather random but very extensive reading, chiefly of Probate records there. I found sundry Hathornes connected with London and with Berkshire (not Wiltshire) mostly. Among them was a John Hathorne, citizen and carpenter of London, whose will, of 26 June, was proved 23 November, 1577. He mentioned the church of Great All Hallows, Thames Street,—wife Elizabeth, &c, and appointed as her overseers Christopher Swaldell and William Hathorne, citizens and barber-surgeons of London. The will of William Hathorne, citizen and barber-surgeon of London, made 9 October, was proved 16 October, 1582. He wished his body to be buried in the church of St. Michael near Queenhithe, where he was a parishioner, and left the bulk of his estate to wife Elizabeth and his children, Christopher, Susan and Judith; if these should all die without issue then to the children of brother Robert (equally). Separate bequests to William Hathorne, son of brother Robert, and the rest of Robert's children (not named), to the widow Starr, the widow Dove, and a brother-in-law, Thomas Horton. The will of Christopher, only son of the foregoing, was made 1 October, 1603, and proved 28 July, 1604. His body to be buried in the church of St. Michael at Queenhithe. He names a sister Elizabeth,—Peter West, son-in-law of William Bond,—sundry children of John Horton,—sister Mrs. Horton,—a son of uncle Anthony Culverwell,—and appoints as executrix his mother Elizabeth, now the wife of William Furtho, grocer.

These notes I saved on account of the given names Robert and William, leaving it for further research to show whether they were at all related to our William and his brother Robert. The next will which I shall give is more significant.

Richard Hawthorne of the parish of St. Lawrence, Waltham, Berkshire, yeoman; will dated 24 October, 1644, proved 15 January, 1644 (my hearers will bear in mind that March was then the first month in the year); to elder son Richard, land in Bray; two younger sons, Thomas and Robert; three daughters, Jane, Mary and Elizabeth; wife Katherine; land in Bray bought of brother William Hawthorne. Here we have again the names Robert and William and in connection too with the parish of Bray.

We are evidently growing warmer in our hunt. The next will is equally interesting.

Edmund Hathorne of London; will of 15 June, proved 26 June, 1652; mother Sara; brothers Robert and Nathaniel; a tenement in Bray, Berkshire.

Thus far I had reached in my first visit to London in 1879. When I went over again in 1883, under a general commission to look up the English ancestry of all our early settlers, a task to which I devoted about fifteen years of rather strenuous labor, I bore in mind, of course, the Hathorne quest. It was then that I made note of the will of Robert Hathorne, the elder, of the parish of Bray, in Berkshire, yeoman, dated 15 February, 1689, and proved 16 February, 1691. He left all his estate to his son Robert, the younger, of Bray. Here we have doubtless the "brother Robert" on whom was drawn that Bill of Exchange. Later I found the two following wills.

William Hathorne of Binfield, in Berkshire, yeoman; will made 18 May, 1650, proved 2 May, 1651; the poor of Binfield; to son Robert all that my messuage or tenement in Bray in said County, now in the tenure of my brother-in-law John Lawrence, and other lands and buildings there (described, some of it butting upon Oakely Green), one of the parcels called "Bishop's Cloase," a cottage, &c., lately in the tenure of Richard Braiser, &c., upon condition the said Robert pay to testator's eldest son William one hundred pounds within two years &c., and to son John twenty pounds within three years, &c.; further, to son John twenty pounds if he be living, otherwise to his wife and children, within one year, &c. To son Nathaniel twenty pounds in money; to younger son Edmond thirty acres and more in Bray, he to pay my daughter Elizabeth, the wife of Mr. Richard Davenport, forty pounds within two years, &c.; daughter Anne, the wife of Hugh Smith, and her daughter Elizabeth; Robert, Sara, Anne and Katherine, the children of my son-in-law Philip Lee; the residue to wife Sara who is to be sole executrix; witnesses, John Sowthey als Hayle, Thomas Dyer, Robert Sowthey als Hayle.

Will of Sara Hathorne of Binfield, Berks; widow, dated 5 September, 1655, and proved by Nathaniel Hathorne, son and sole executor, 14 March, 1655; to the poor of Binfield; certain household goods to son Robert and to daughter Anne, wife of Hugh Smith; bequests to two grandchildren, Anne and Katherine Lee; other grandchildren, Sara Hathorne, Elizabeth Hathorne, Susanna Hathorne, Nathaniel Hathorne, William Smith and Elizabeth Smith; late servant, Anne Middleton; residue to son Nathaniel who is to be sole executor; witnesses, John Yonges and Henry Otwaie.

These two, William and Sara Hathorne of Binfield, must surely have been the parents of Major William Hathorne of Salem, John Hathorne of Lynn and Elizabeth the wife of Captain Davenport. We find that, besides the brother Robert of whom we already knew, they had a brother Nathaniel who was living in England at the time of his mother's death, another brother Edmond, who died during his mother's widowhood and whose will we have noticed, besides a sister Anne, the wife of Hugh Smith, and another sister, wife of Philip Lee. This Philip Lee made his will 18 August, 1654, proved 31 August, 1654; he styles himself of Binfield, Berkshire, gentleman; mentions son Robert, daughters Sara, Anne and Katherine Lee, a freehold estate in Bluberry, Berks., and brothers-in-law Robert and Nathaniel Hathorne whom he appoints executors.

Then I found another will which was worth notice, that of Nathaniel Hathorne of Cookham in Berkshire, gentleman, made 27 September, 1652, and proved 29 July, 1654, by his relict and executrix, Martha Hathorne, to whom he bequeathes eight hundred pounds in lieu of her jointure and thirds; he held the manor of South Bruham in Somersetshire and estates in Devonshire, Somersetshire and Berkshire; he names four brothers-in-law, Thomas Loggins and John, Ralphe and Thomas Whistler, gentlemen; "my three own sisters," Elizabeth, Mary and Anne, and John Laurence the husband of Anne; son-in-law William Mattingley and Jone his wife; kinsman William Eldridge and Judith his wife; Anne Winche the wife of my nephew John Winch; nephew William Winche; the poor of Cookham and South Bruham; wife Martha to be sole executrix, and two loving kinsmen, Dr. Daniel Whistler of Gresham College and John Whinche of London, haberdasher, to be overseers; one of the witnesses was a John Hathorne.

This will adds to our knowledge of the family. The testator must have been a brother of William Hathorne of Binfield and uncle of our New England Hathornes, and he also gives the baptismal names of three aunts of theirs, one of them the wife of the John Lawrence mentioned in their father's will. Moreover he refers to a nephew John Winch, who was probably the same man at whose house that Bill of Exchange was made payable.

We have thus opened up for our Salem and Lynn Hathornes quite a family connection in old England, and all the evidence seems to point to Binfield and Bray and their neighborhood in the North Eastern part of Berkshire, close to Windsor Forest and Park, as their English home. I found also sundry other wills, now in the keeping of my friend Mr. Lothrop Withington, in London, and not yet published, which disclosed successive generations of Hathornes living in Winkfield, a neighboring parish to Binfield. From a "History and Antiquities of the Hundred of Bray," by Charles Kerry, London, 1861, I learned that there was a Manor of Cruchfields and Hawthorne; that a William Hathorne was one of the tenants of Queen Lease in the Manor of Bray, in 1650. In the "Rentall of the Manor of Bray" for that year, William Hathorne is charged one pound per annum for all lands holden of the manor; Thomas Hathorne is charged three shillings; the heirs of Robert Hathorne, five shillings and William Hawthorne, jr., five pence. In the "Assert Rent of Bray," 1658, under the title "Oakley" I find Robert Hawthorne, for house and lands, six shillings and four pence, Thomas Hathorne (ditto) three shillings three pence half penny, and Henery Hawthorne, for lands, seven shillings. William Hawthorne was one of the church wardens in Bray, A. D. 1600. In 1609 he was appointed by Sir John Norris one of eight trustees of a Charity then by him established for the relief of poor, impotent and aged persons within the parish. In 1621 William Hawthorne and Thomas Westcott, the surviving trustees, associated with themselves eight other substantial inhabitants of the parish as feoffees in trust, &c. In 1657 it appears that Thomas Wilcox was the surviving trustee. It seems reasonable to infer that this church warden and trustee was the father of our Major William Hathorne.

From Court Rolls and other authentic sources it appears that a John Hathorne died, 1520, leaving Henry his son and heir, who died, 1531, leaving Roger his son and heir. In 1535, a field of Thomas Hothorne adjoined the one held by John Byssshop in Crychefeld. In 1533, Thomas Hothorne was appointed collector for the lands Byssshop held, called "Chaunters," by yearly rent of twenty shillings nine pence. A William Hothorn died, 1538, leaving William his son and heir. One of the Hathornes married Anne, daughter of Gilbert Loggins, circa 1605. This must have been Major Hathorne's uncle Nathaniel who named in his will a brother-in-law Thomas Loggins, and it gives us the name of his first wife. His last wife was probably a Whistler. I saw other notices of the name which I will not now rehearse. On page 110, I noted "The Legend of Hawthorn," which narrates the finding of two pots of gold on Hawthorn Hill near Cruchfield. Pity that our own Nathaniel did not know of this Legend.

Fuller, in his "Worthies of England," tells us that "Bray is a village well known in Barkshire; the vivacious Vicar whereof, living under King H. the VIIIth, King Edw. the VIth, Qu. Mary and Qu. Elizth. was first a papist, then a protestant, then a papist, then a protestant again. This Vicar, being taxed by one for being a turn-coat, 'Not so' (said he) 'for I have always kept my principle; which is this, to live and die Vicar of Bray.'" To this Fuller adds "such are men now-a-days, who though they cannot turn the wind they turn their mills and set them so that, wheresouever it bloweth their grist should certainly be ground." This "Vivacious Vicar" was undoubtedly well known to Major Hathorne's father or grandfather.

It is not known who Major Hathorne's wife was, except that her baptismal name was Anne. I saved the following will on the chance of its turning out to relate to her family :

Richard Smith of St. Dunstan's in the West, London, Cook; will dated 13 January, 1660, proved 17 January, 1661; to be buried in the parish church; wife Joane; brother John Smith; to my sister Ann Hawthorne five acres in the possession of John Alley, butcher, of the yearly value of five pounds, for her natural life, &c; then to her two sons John and Nathaniel Hawthorne equally; brother John Smith's sons Samuel (eldest) and Richard; to William Hawthorne, son of Anne Hawthorne, my sister, the reversion of one pigtle, called Leachrye or Tan-house pigtle, containing by estimation three acres, in the possession of John Vincent; loving sister Mary Holloway and the heirs of her body, loving sister Rachel Horton and the heirs of her body, the children of John Topping begotten upon the body of my sister Prudence; leases of two houses in Chancery Lane; loving friend Mr. Robert Hawe of Wokeingham; the poor of the town and parish of Wokeingham; lands, &c., in Wokeingham, Berkshire; Mr. Sedgwick, without Temple Bar; brother John Smith to be executor and Richard Palmer of Wokeingham, Esq. to be overseer, George Chapman a witness. Wokeingham, or Wokingham, it should be observed, is southwest from Binfield and only about three miles away. It looks as if this were the home of Major Hathorne's wife. If so it certainly adds to the interest which attaches to this region as the English home of our Hathorne family. A careful examination of the parish registers and other records should be made in order to get further information about the family.

The Hawthornes sprang from the yeomanry like most of our early New England settlers. I believe there never was a more even and homogeneous community, hardly any one of them occupying a very high position in England and very few indeed of the lowest class; the vast majority of them belonged to what would now be called the great

Middle Class of Englishmen, but was better styled then the Yeomanry of England. And it should be always borne in mind that the Colony at first was a Company, under a Charter, having all the rights and privileges which any of the great Companies of London possessed, among which was the power of selection of its members who attained membership and were made free of its privileges only after a careful scrutiny into their standing in the community and their reputation and consideration among their neighbors in respect to ability, character and moral worth as well as their religious opinions. In short they were picked men, for the most part, so that Mr. William Stoughton could truly say, in an Election Sermon, delivered in 1668, "God sifted a whole nation in order that he might send choice grain into the wilderness." They were of the plain, God-fearing people, a slip cut right out of the heart of the best English stock, when at its healthiest and soundest,—brought over and struck into a new soil, under new conditions, such as would be sure to develop a vigorous, healthy, hardy plant. It is to such a people that we largely owe the establishment on firm foundations of this union of self-governing commonwealths which appeals to the judgment of mankind as the wisest and most perfect form of political organization yet devised to bind together great communities comprehending "all sorts and conditions of men," dominated by various interests, influenced by differing temperaments, inheriting different traditions, and widely distributed over a vast area possessing divers climatic conditions and physical characteristics, a political type and model for all the world, an example set to mankind of individual freedom and equality under law. Here at last is Opportunity, offered equally to all; here each may develop his peculiar talent and make manifest his special worth; here man becomes Man for the first time in history, freed from the shackles or hindrances to growth which were forged by caste and ancient customs,—the clogs imposed by tradition, convention and privilege. Here too should be exemplified Fraternity, that logical complement of Liberty and Equality; these together constituting the goal towards which mankind is surely tending; and it will be here exemplified if only we prove faithful to the ideal set forth in the Declaration of Independence propounded by men who showed themselves, by that act, to be the wisest and greatest of their time, since, in so doing, they set up a standard for all mankind eventually to accept as a rule of life politically. If, here or there, some faint heart pronounces it a “glittering generality” or “an impossible dogma and a rhetorical phrase” he only proclaims himself a “craven weakling,” a man who has lost for a time his faith in eternal right and justice. As well declare impossible the Golden Rule, accepted by Christendom as the law of righteous living for the individual man, because, for sooth, a vast number of professing Christians do not wholly, as yet, square their lives according to its teachings. The ideal is still before us and will be forever, because it is the revelation of an everlasting truth and in our inmost consciences we know that it is possible. It is for us so to manage the affairs of the republic as best to illustrate that ideal, and not, because of pessimistic lack of faith, to reject it. That will only lead to spiritual death and, sooner or later, to moral rottenness, to material decay; and at the end there will be one more added to the number of lost empires. Once realize fully what this republic means to humanity and patriotism will cease to show itself in ebullitions of vain glory, in silly, brutal boastings about physical mig t or material wealth, for it will have merged into something infinitely finer and greater, becoming one and the same with love of all mankind, a realizing sense of the brotherhood of man. Then men will arrive at the consciousness of what constitutes the real greatness of a nation and will see that the true "world power" is the benign and ever widening influence of a lofty example in righteous living, whether in man or nation.

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS AND MANUSCRIPTS

Four autograph letters of Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Loaned by the Misses Manning.

Salem, Dec. 9, 1813. To his uncle Robert Manning, Salem, Mass.

His foot is no better. Sister Louisa is better and has begun to go to school. His mother intends sending for Dr. Kittridge as Dr. Barstow's treatment has not helped the foot. It is four weeks yesterday since he went to school. Has been out in the office two or three times and once hopped into the street.

Raymond [Maine], Mar. 24, 1819. To his uncle Robert Manning, Salem, Mass.

Hopes his uncle has arrived safely at the end of his journey. Mr. Tarbox and his wife were frozen to death the previous Wednesday. The bodies were brought from the Cape and buried from Capt. Dingley's on Sunday. The snow going very fast. The writing paper cost two cents a sheet. Is going to Portland at noon with Mr. Leach.

On the same sheet is a letter from his mother to her sister-in-law, Mary Manning. Is sorry to trouble her to have another gown made for Elizabeth (Hawthorne's sister), who thinks it cannot be made save in Salem. Wishes to have it fashionably made and cut longer than the silk gown left at Salem.

Raymond [Maine], May 16, 1819. To his uncle Robert Manning, Salem, Mass.

The grass and trees are green, the fences finished and the garden planted. Two of the goats are on the island and the other kept for the milk. Has shot a partridge and a hen-hawk and caught eighteen large trout. Is sorry that his uncle intends sending him to school again. His mother can hardly spare him. Nothing heard of Dr. Brown. Expect he is lost in the woods.

Salem, Aug. 15, 1820. To his uncle Robert Manning, Raymond, Maine.

Hopes his uncle has arrived safely. The sloop in which the dog is to sail has not gone. "Watch is afflicted with a difficulty of breathing, owing I am afraid to his excessive eating." The first volume of the Analectic is returned. "The Register has bestowed much praise, but no reward besides upon you." Louisa is going to see the Temple of Industry in the evening.

Fifty-two autograph letters, of Nathaniel Hawthorne and others.

Loaned by Mrs. Richard C. Manning.

Salem, July 26, 1819. To his uncle Robert Manning, Raymond, Maine.

Has begun to go to school and can find no fault except "It's not dear enough, only five dollars a quarter, and not near enough, for it is up by the Baptist Meeting House." Sometimes has bad fits of homesickness. "There is a pot of excellent guaver jelly now in the house and one of preserved limes and I am afraid they will mould if you do not come soon for it's esteemed sacrilege by Grandmother to eat any of them now because she is keeping them against somebody is sick and I suppose she would be very much disappointed if everybody was to continue well and they were to spoil."

Salem, Mar. 7, 1820. To his mother, Raymond, Maine.

Has left school and begun to fit for college under Benjamin L. Oliver, lawyer. Is very homesick, "shall you want me to be a Minister, Doctor, or Lawyer? A Minister I will not be." "Oh how I wish I was again with you, with nothing to do but to go a gunning. But the happiest days of my life are gone."

Salem, Mar. 21, 1820. To his sister Louisa, Raymond, Maine.

Hopes mother will not wear a cap. Thinks it will look horribly. Longs for his gun. "Wish that I could again savagize with you."

Salem, Mar. 28, 1820. To his mother, Raymond, Maine. Went to Boston on Saturday. Expects soon to go to the theatre.

Hopes that his gun still remains in the closet. Uncle Robert is going to Raymond in the chaise when the travelling improves.

Salem, May 2, 1820. To his uncle Robert Manning, Raymond, Maine.

Training day. Is going to the theatre the next day. "My gun has a very large charge in it, and I guess it will kick." Sleeps very comfortably alone.

Salem, July 25, 1820. To his mother, Raymond, Maine.

"Louisa seems to be quite full of her dancing acquirements. She is continually putting on very stately airs, and making curtsies." Mr. Dike's schooner has arrived.

Salem, Sept. 26, 1820. To his mother, Raymond, Maine.

"I am at present a man of many occupations. I study Greek in the Forenoon and write for Uncle William in the Afternoon for which I receive one dollar a week. Uncle William intends to give me a new Suit of Clothes. I was happy to hear that Uncle Richard had arrived to the high station of Justice of Peace. Though he is lame yet he outstrips all of his Brothers."

Salem, Oct. 31, 1820. To his mother, Raymond, Maine.

Uncle Robert wishes her to send to Mr. Coburn's for three bundles of trees and bushes. Uncle Robert has promised to take him to Raymond, the next time he goes. Has not seen his mother for nearly a year. Continues to write for Uncle William.

On the same sheet is a letter to his sister Elizabeth. Is angry because she has not sent some of her poetry,—“a great piece of Ingratitude.” Admires Godwin's novels and has read all of Scott's. “I have almost giving up writing poetry. No Man can be a Poet & a Book Keeper at the same time.”

Salem, May 29, 1821. To his mother, Raymond, Maine.

“Please ask Uncle Robert where I am to procure my Greek and Latin books, now that the Constitution of the Stage Company is altered.” Can send but one of the Palladium's. Have not had the others.

Salem, June 19, 1821. To his mother, Raymond, Maine.

"Uncle William has given Elizabeth a Leghorn Bonnet, of the moderate price of 15 Dollars. It is so large that the most piercing eye cannot discover her beneath it." Hopes his mother will not return to Salem to live.

Salem, Aug. 28, 1821. To his mother, Raymond, Maine.

"Mr. Oliver says I will get into College, therefore Uncle Robert need be under no apprehensions." Hopes that nothing will prevent him from visiting Raymond in January. Probably the last letter to be written from Salem.

Brunswick, Me., Oct. 9, 1821. To his uncle William Manning, Salem, Mass.

Has entered college. His chum is the son of the Hon. Mr. Mason of Portsmouth. Is boarding at Professor Newman's. College laws are not strict and is not studying so hard as at Salem.

Brunswick, Oct. 17, 1821. To his mother, Raymond Maine.

Will need money at the end of the term. Is contented and finds college a much pleasanter place than he expected. Has not heard from Salem since leaving.

Brunswick, Oct. 30, 1821. To his mother, Raymond, Maine.

Is living in great harmony with his chum. Would like some money. Will not need a feather bed. Vacation begins December 19th.

Brunswick, Nov. 13, 1821. To his mother, Raymond, Maine.

Has been unwell with the measles. Needs money for the Doctor who visited five times and supplied medicines.

Brunswick, Dec. 4, 1821. To his uncle Robert Manning [Salem, Mass.].

Has received his letter enclosing ten dollars and has paid the Doctor's bill. "I hope you will call for me, for I long to get home."

Brunswick, May 1, 1822. To his mother, Raymond, Maine.

Vacation will commence May 8th and needs money to go home by stage. Has received a watch "with which I am well pleased, and cut a great dash."

Brunswick, May 29, 1822. William Allen, President of Bowdoin College, to Mrs. Elizabeth C. Hathorne, Salem, Mass.

Announces that her son has been fined fifty cents for playing cards for money, probably influenced by a fellow student, since dismissed, and requests that she admonish her son.

Brunswick, May 30, 1822. Nathaniel Hathorne to his mother, Salem, Mass.

Hopes for her safe arrival at Salem. The card players at college have been found out "my unfortunate self among the number." "I have not played at all this term. I have not drank any kind of spirit of wine this term, and shall not till the last week."

Brunswick, Aug. 5, 1822. To his sister Elizabeth, Salem, Mass.

Exchanges compliments because of her rebuke at the shortness and infrequency of his letters. The President's letter not so severe as expected. Finds Hume's History of England "abominably dull." Is a member of the Athenæum Society and borrows books from its library of eight hundred volumes.

Brunswick, Aug. 12, 1823. To his uncle —.

Acknowledges receipt of money. Has heard that a steamboat plys between Portland and Boston and would like to go home that way "if Mother has no apprehensions of the boiler's bursting." Has had much to do. Writes a theme, or essay, of three or four pages, every fortnight.

Brunswick, July 14, 1825. To his sister —.

"I am not very well pleased with Mr. Dike's report of me. The family had before conceived most too high an opinion of my talents, and had probably formed expectations, which I shall never realize. I have thought much upon the subject, and have finally come to the conclusion, that I shall never make a distinguished figure in the world, and all I hope or wish is to plod along with the multitude."

"The President called me to his study, and informed me that though my rank in the class entitled me to a part, yet it was contrary to the laws to give me one, on account of my neglect of Declamation. . . . I am perfectly satisfied with this arrangement, as it is a sufficient testimony of my scholarship, while it saves me the mortification of making my appearance in public at Commencement."

Burlington, Vt., Sept. 16, 1832. Nathaniel Hawthorne to his mother, Salem, Mass.

Has arrived in safety, having passed through the White Hills, stopping at Ethan Crawford's house, and climbing Mt. Washington. Is not decided as to his future course. Has no intention of going into Canada. Has heard that cholera is prevalent in Boston.

Boston, Jan. 21, 1836. To his sister Louisa, Salem, Mass.

Is busy with agents, clerks, engravers, stereotype printers, etc. Boards at Thomas G. Fessenden's, 53 Hancock street, and is pleasantly situated. Asks if his sister Elizabeth has concocted anything [for the American magazine] and requests her to make extracts of whatever she thinks suitable. Has the run of the [Boston] Athenæum but is not allowed to take out books.

Boston, Jan. 25, 1836. To his sister Elizabeth [Salem, Mass.].

"I make nothing of writing a history or biography before dinner." "Daniel Webster drinks, and is notoriously immoral; he is enormously in debt (one man having endorsed $100,000. for him) and altogether a disreputable character,—so say the Whigs." "My worshipful self is a very famous man in London—the Athenæum having noticed all my articles in the last Token, with long extracts."

[Boston], Feb. 4th [1836]. An unsigned note to his sister [Louisa].

Asks that Elizabeth finish her life of Hamilton. "I have set these wretches to work upon his head, also Jefferson—each to fill about 4 pages."

Boston, Feb. 10, 1836. To his sister Elizabeth, Salem, Mass.

Does all his writing and other business at his room and not at the Company's office. Has "copy" enough to make up the next number.

Requests her to write a biographical sketch of Jefferson to fill four magazine pages. Such work does not suit him. "In regard to ordinary biographical subject, my way is to take some old magazine and make an abstract—you can't think how easy it is."

Boston, Feb. 15, 1836. To his sister Louisa, Salem, Mass.

Is in urgent need of money. Now over a month since leaving Salem and received not a cent, except five dollars borrowed from uncle Robert, and out of which paid stage fare, etc. "I came here trusting to Goodrich's positive promise to pay me 45 dollars as soon as I arrived; and he has kept promising from [one] day to another, till I do not see that he means to pay me at all. I have now broke off all intercourse with him, and never think of going near him. . . . I defy him to get another to do for a thousand dollars what I do for 500; and further more, I have no doubt that Goodrich was authorized to give me 600. He made the best bargain with me he could, and a hard bargain too." "It is well that I have enough to do; or I should have had the blues most damnably here; for of course I have no amusement. My present stock is precisely 34 cents. . . . All that I have spent in Boston, except for absolute necessities, has been 9 cents in the first day I came —6 for a glass of wine and three for a cigar."

[Boston], Mar. 3, 1836. An unsigned note to his sister Louisa, Salem, Mass.

Requests that Elizabeth send "some original poetry—and other concoctions." The magazine will be out in a day or two.

An undated and unsigned note to sister Louisa.

"Read this infernal Magazine and send me your criticisms. To me it appears very dull and respectable—almost worthy of Mr. Bradford himself." The next issue is within ten pages of being completed. "I could not go to meeting to-day, because I had but one clean shirt, which I was afraid to expend till tomorrow, and so I staid at home and wrote a dissertation on the Tower of Babel."

Boston, Mar. 23, 1836. To his sister Elizabeth, Salem, Mass.

The press was in need of the biography of Hamilton and so was obliged to finish it himself. "You should not make quotations; but put other people's thoughts into your own words and amalgamate the whole into a mass." "Those ridiculous Gazette people were in such a hurry to puff me that they puffed poor Mr. Bradford. They could not possibly have seen the March number when that notice was inserted."

An undated and unsigned note to his sister [Elizabeth].

"I have been applied to to write a man's travels in Texas, Mexico, and the Devil knows where, but declined on account of my numerous avocations."

Boston, May 5, 1836. To his sister Elizabeth, Salem, Mass.

"I saw Mr. Goodrich yesterday, and he told me, that he was going to reply to Paul Benjamin's criticisms, in to-day's Courier. I looked at the Courier before breakfast this morning; and lo and behold! the ridiculous man had written a whole column against the editor of the American Magazine. I have a good mind to hit him a poke in my turn, to teach him not to commit such blunders in future. He wants me to undertake a Universal History, to contain almost as much matter as 50 or 60 pages of the magazine. If you are willing to write any part of it (which I should think you ought now that it is warm weather) I shall agree to it."

[Boston], May 12, [1836]. An unsigned note to his sister Elizabeth.

"Our pay as Historians of the Universe, will be 100 dollars, the whole of which you may have. It is a poor compensation, yet better than the Token; because the kind of writing is so much less difficult."

Portland, July 1, 1837. An unsigned and unaddressed note.

In relation to conveyances of land of Richard Manning, deceased.

Concord, July 10, 1842. To his sister Louisa, Salem, Mass.

"The execution took place yesterday. [His marriage to Sophia Amelia Peabody.] We made a Christian end, and came straight to Paradise, where we abide at this present writing. We are as happy as people can be, without making themselves ridiculous, and might be even happier ; but, as a matter of taste, we choose to stop short at this point."

Concord, Aug. 15, 1842. To his sister Louisa, Salem, Mass.

Conveys to her Mrs. Hillard's invitation to spend the night at 54 Pinckney street, while on her way to Concord and urges her to accept the courtesy.

Concord, Oct. 12, 1842. To his sister Louisa, Salem, Mass.

Has just received her letter announcing the death of uncle Robert Manning and regrets his inability to be present at the funeral. "Believe me (not the less because I seldom say it) your loving brother."

Concord, Nov. 28, 1842. To his sister Louisa, Salem, Mass.

"I shall not get the Salem Post-office. If Rantoul gains his election to Congress, he will get it for Woodbury—otherwise Foote will not be removed. Nevertheless, I am promised something satisfactory in the course of six months or so." "We have a Lyceum here, and I have been invited to lecture. Of course, I did not hesitate a moment to accept. Wonderful to say, I attended the first lecture, which was by Mr. Emerson."

Concord, Mar. 3, 1844. To his sister Louisa, Salem, Mass.

Announces the birth of a daughter, at 9.30 o'clock that morning. "I have not yet seen the baby. Mrs. Peabody says it is lovely. Dr. Bartlett has the audacity to say that it looks like him, and has red hair." "P.S. We had a name ready—Una! Is not it pretty? Una Hawthorne! Una Hawthorne !! It is very pretty."

Cambridge, Feb. 8 [1848]. Henry W. Longfellow to Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Has been hoping to see him at Cambridge or to receive a letter. Has been in bed for two weeks the result of a surgical operation during which time "a literary project arises in my mind for you to execute. Perhaps I can pay you back in part your generous gift, by giving you a theme for story in return for a theme for song. It is neither more or less than the history of the Acadians, after their expulsion as well as before. Felton has been making researches in the State Archives & offers to resign the documents into your hands." Urges Hawthorne to come and spend the night with him at Cambridge.

West Newton, May 16, 1852. Nathaniel Hawthorne to his sister Louisa [Salem, Mass.].

Invites her to visit the family at Concord "where we hope to be, certainly, in the course of next week." "My book is in press."

Concord, June 18, 1852. To his sister Louisa, Salem, Mass.

Urges her to come immediately. House not yet in order, but can make her comfortable. "We like the house and the place very much, and begin, at last, to feel that we have a home. . . . The children long to see you."

Concord, Apr. 5, 1853. To his sister Elizabeth.
"We shall sail for Liverpool sometime in July."

Concerns financial matters relating to his mother. "The children are beginning to be less homesick than they were."

Rock Park, Rock Ferry [England], March 12 ——. Una Hawthorne to her uncle John Dike [Salem, Mass.].

The spring flowers are in blossom and the weather is delightful. "Julian is lying on the floor learning a hymn, and I have been practising on the piano." Describes a walk of three or four miles enjoyed that afternoon.

Nov. 6 ——. Una Hawthorne to her uncle [John] Dike [Salem, Mass.].

Could not sleep for some time the previous night "because the rockets & guns kept firing off & lighting up the curtain of my room," in commemoration of the Gunpowder Plot. Enjoys her music but thinks England not half so pleasant as America.

The Wayside [Concord], Aug. 28, 1860. Nathaniel Hawthorne to his cousin [Richard Manning, Salem, Mass.].

Two autograph letters.

Loaned by Miss Alice M. Longfellow

Salem, Feb. 10, 1848. Nathaniel Hawthorne to Henry W. Longfellow [Cambridge, Mass.].

Intends to go to Cambridge next week. "The idea of a history of Acadie takes my fancy greatly; but I fear I should not be justifiable to the world, were I to take it out of the abler hands of Professor Felton. . . . You have made the subject so popular that a history could hardly fail of circulation. I write in my office, and am pestered by intruders."

Concord, June 26, [1853. Nathaniel Hawthorne to Henry W. Longfellow [Cambridge, Mass.].

Regrets that he cannot at that time visit Longfellow.

PERSONAL SKETCHES OF EARLY INHABITANTS OF GEORGETOWN, MASS.

BY ELLEN W. SPOFFORD.

One of the first land-holders of Georgetown, any considerable portion of whose history has come down to us, was Capt. Samuel Brocklebank who, as early as 1661, had a farm of seventy-two acres laid out to him by Pen brook. He had a house on this farm which he is supposed to have occupied during the farm season, but in the winter he removed to Rowley village. We can imagine what his life must have been in that little clearing in the unbroken wilderness so far from any white man and in constant peril from the Indians. The reason for his settlement in this lonely and dangerous place appears from the Rowley record of March, 1662, where we read that Lieut. Samuel Brocklebank and Richard Swan were appointed to join with the selectmen of Haverhill to decide where the road from Haverhill to Rowley should be. It is probable that he intended to make this farm his home and to open up a road through the forest to Haverhill, but these plans were not to be carried out, for in 1675 King Philip's War broke out, spreading alarm and consternation among all the colonies. Soldiers were ordered to be raised and Samuel Brocklebank, now captain, reported on the twenty-ninth of November, 1675, to Gov. John Leverett as follows:—"This may certify, that we have impressed twelve men according to our warrant, and have given them charge to fit themselves well with warm clothing, and we hope they will, and doe endeavor to fix themselves well as they can, only some of them are men that but lately come to town and want arms the which to provide for them we must press other men's arms, which is very grievous (except they can be provided for upon the country's account, which would be very acceptable, if it could be)." With this little company of twelve men, Captain Brocklebank bade farewell forever to his lonely home on Pen brook and to his Rowley friends, and after serving in the war about five months was killed in an engagement in the town of Sudbury and buried in the forest where he fell.

Although we have the record of this partial settlement by Captain Brocklebank, as early as 1661, the credit of being the earliest permanent settler of Georgetown has always been given to John Spofford, who was the first man to build a house within the limits of what is now Georgetown and occupy it the year round.

John Spofford was born in 1612, and is supposed to have come to this country from England with a company of Yorkshiremen before 1643, as his name appears under that date on the record of the first division of lands in Rowley into homestead lots. His wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Scott, of Ipswich. They lived in Rowley for about thirty years, and in 1669 removed to Spofford's hill. The following record, dated March 17, 1668, relates to the farm taken by him: "It was agreed and voted that John Spofford, if he would go to the farme that was granted to be laid out in the three thousand akers, that he should have the benefit of penninge the cattell, for the terme of seven years, he keeping the herd of the younger cattel as carefully and as cheape as any other should doe."

Mr. Henry M. Nelson, to whom I am indebted for much information given herein, accounts for this change of residence from the Rowley settlement to the lonely and dangerous frontier "near the Bald Hills," as it is described in the record, as follows:—"The cabin, or log-hut, known as the pen-house was near by, and the responsible position of herdsman was now to pass into the hands of the Spofford family. John Spofford and his sons may have previously been entrusted with the serious duties of seeing that no harm befell this valuable property of the Rowley farmers seven miles away. Mr. Spofford had charges against Rowley the year before of £3, 13s., for overseeing fences and of £2, 10s., for killing a 'wolfe.'"

Accustomed to live in the wilderness, he readily accepted the offer of the town, and building his house became a permanent settler. He took a lease of the farm for twenty-one years, agreeing to pay as rent for the first five years "three hundred feet of white oak planks and after that time ten pounds each year, one half in English corn at price current or Indian corn, if he pleases, and the other half in fat cattel, or leane at price current." It is probable that he removed to Rowley two years before his death, leaving the farm to his sons. The exact time of his death is unknown, but as his will was presented at the probate court Nov. 17, 1678, he probably died not long before that date. This will is still in existence and is an interesting document. It begins as follows:—"I commit my soule into the hands of God who gave it, and my body to the earth, to be decently buried, and as to that estate which the Lord hath given, I dispose of it as follows, after my debts are payd. Imprimis—As for my dear and loving wife, I give to her the lease of the house and lands of Mrs. Prudence Cotton. Also I give to her all the household stuff, to be at her disposal except the arms and ammunition. Also I give to her two cows and one calfe, also four sheep. I give to her and my son Francis, to be equally divided between them, one young horse, also to have the use of four acres of land at the farm during her life. Furthermore, I will that my son Francis, his portion be at my wife's disposal till he comes to the age of twenty-one years if she live so long, for that end that he may be helpfull to her to carry on her husbandry work."

These few details are all the record we have of the life of this father of the town. That he must have been full of courage and indifferent to hardship and loneliness seems certain from the fact that he left the settlement at Rowley and chose to make his home in the vicinity of Baldpate, one of the favorite camping grounds of the Indians. This anecdote of John Spofford has also been preserved for us by Miss Aphia Spofford in her Spofford genealogy: "During his residence at Rowley, a severe drought was followed by a great scarcity of food, and he repaired to Salem to purchase corn for his family and neighbors. The merchant to whom he applied, foreseeing a greater scarcity and higher prices, refused to open his store to supply his want. Having pleaded the necessities of himself and others in vain, he cursed him to his face, but on being taken immediately before a magistrate, charged with profane swearing, he replied that he had not cursed profanely but as a religious duty, and quoted Prov. 11 : 26, as his authority. The words are, 'He that withholdeth corn from the hungry, the people shall curse him.' He was immediately acquitted and by the summary power of courts in those days, the merchant was ordered to deliver him as much corn as he could pay for."

John Spofford had nine children, all but two of whom married and had large families. Two of the sons, John and Samuel, continued to live on the old farm, and after their death it passed into the hands of Capt. John Spofford, grandson of the first settler. He lived and died on the farm and his gravestone with its quaintly spelled and capitalized inscription may still be seen in the old cemetery. His brother Jonathan Spofford, was disciplined by the church for living in open discord with his wife. Miss Aphia Spofford wrote of him: "It is related that from lack of devotional feeling or want of confidence in the piety of her husband—undoubtedly the latter—his wife, on at least one occasion continued her work while he was conducting family worship, and making her the subject of one of his petitions he characterized her by an epithet quite inconsistent with conjugal tenderness. Divers peccadilloes and eccentricities ascribed to him by tradition—notably, taking a young son on a coveted excursion tightly tied in a bag—leave to later generations scant room for doubt concerning which was the greater sinner of the two."

After the first settlement in 1669 others were made in the vicinity, until it is said that at one time there were ten or twelve houses occupied by Spofford families almost in sight of one another. One of these, the house now occupied by Mr. Woodbury, was built by Dea. Eleazer Spofford, a grandson of Captain John. He was born in 1739, and lived here until 1778, when he removed to Jaffrey, N. H. There is a tradition in the family that his eldest daughter carried the money for the purchase of the Jaffrey farm on horseback from Georgetown to Jaffrey, quilted in her skirt. Deacon Spofford is said to have been an ingenious mechanic and a good citizen and was noted for his musical ability.

One of the most prominent of the early Spofford settlers was Col. Daniel Spofford, a son of the Captain John previously mentioned. Upon the death of his father the farm passed into his hands, and he built and occupied for many years the old Spofford house on the hill which was recently torn down. He was born in April, 1721, and married Judith Follansbee in 1741. He was made colonel of the 7th regiment of militia in Essex county and marched with his regiment to take part in the battle of Lexington in 1775, but did not arrive until the battle was over. He was a member of the convention which formed the state constitution in 1780, and in 1781 was elected deacon of the church. To quote again from Miss Spofford: "He built several churches, and his skill as an architect may be judged of by the way in which he effected the enlargement of the meeting-house formerly occupied by the Congregational Society in Peabody. The building was cut in two crosswise, the ends moved apart, making room for two rows of new pews. Upon the still greater increase of the society, his services were again required to enlarge their borders, which he did by dividing the building lengthwise, and making two rows of pews with a broad aisle through its whole length."

The colonel's son, Dr. Amos Spofford, was the next owner of the farm and house. He was born in 1751, and was the first physician in New Rowley, having an extensive practice in this vicinity from 1771 to 1805. He was one of the original members of the Massachusetts Medical Society, and was considered a good doctor. Although his fees were by no means exorbitant, the regular price for a visit being a shilling, he brought up a family of eleven children, giving at least one of them a college education, and when he died his estate was valued at nearly sixteen thousand dollars. One of his sons, Sewall, and a daughter, Judith, continued to live in the old house until their deaths.

The following story of Doctor Spofford, which illustrates his leniency in the discipline of his eleven children, is a family tradition. When his daughter Judith was nine or ten years old she was left at home one day in charge of her two baby brothers. The coasting in the "twin field," as the field opposite the house was called, was fine and Judith longed to try it, but she had no sled. A little sleigh just big enough for one person, in which her father sometimes rode, was in the barn, however, and she decided to make that do instead. Dragging it across the street to the top of the hill she stowed the oldest baby, Sewall, safely away under the seat, and taking the little one in her lap, she started on her perilous journey. As the sleigh bounced along down the icy hill the yells of the poor baby under the seat alternated with the thumping of his head against the floor and sides of the sleigh. At last they reached the bottom and crashed into a stone wall, breaking both shafts, but fortunately not injuring the occupants. It was a terrible task to get the babies up the slippery hill and back to the house, but taking the oldest on her back and the little one in her arms, she finally succeeded after many discouraging failures. She must have awaited the return of her father with some anxiety. When he came she told him her story, expecting a severe punishment, but his only remark when she had finished her confession was, "You little Satan!"

When Judith was thirteen, the ordination of Mr. Braman occurred. At this time Col. Daniel Spofford was still living and occupied one side of the old house, while Doctor Spofford and his family lived in the other. Colonel Daniel also owned the house where Mr. Towne now lives, which at the time of the ordination was unoccupied. As both the Spofford families were expecting many guests to dinner—this being before the day of church kitchens and dining rooms—and as there was much cooking to be done, a fire was built in the big fireplace of this unoccupied house and Judith was left at home to attend to the cooking of some lamb for dinner.

An ordination was a great event in those days, and the whole country-side turned out. Doctor Spofford, as a country physician with a large practice, had a host of friends and acquaintances, and so had Colonel Daniel, and nearly all of them must have been present at the ordination, for when the dinner hour arrived they started for home with no less than three hundred guests to partake of their hospitality. Judith said in later years that when her father got to the top of the hill and looked back at the procession of hungry people following after, he confessed that he was "scared," fearing I suppose that the roast lamb would give out. Whether they had anything but lamb to eat or whether there was enough of that to go round I never heard, but it is certain that Colonel Daniel and Doctor Amos entertained at least three hundred people in the old farmhouse that day.

One of these guests was an old lady from Rowley, one of the doctor's patients, who was perhaps a relative of the man who was invited to take dinner with a friend and stayed forty years. Her visiting propensities were well known and, if the truth be told, somewhat dreaded by the Spoffords. On the day before the ordination, the doctor's wife, knowing her husband's hospitable soul, said to him as he was starting out on his round of visits, "I wish you would not say anything to Miss Blank, about coming here to-morrow, for we have so much to do that I do not see how we can have her here for a long visit just now." "Oh," said the good doctor, "you are too late. I saw her yesterday and she is coming." She was one of the three hundred. The rest departed but she lingered and finally announced that she would spend the night. The next morning her hostess decided to give her a gentle hint so she told her that if she must go that day, Peabody would drive her home. Peabody was one of Doctor Amos's sons, a boy of seventeen. He looked with disfavor upon his mother's proposal, but when told that he must, he went to the barn and harnessed the colt, a very frisky animal, into the little gig. The colt was in his gayest mood and his driver not in a frame of mind to restrain him. The old lady who told this story always said that Spofford's hill was much steeper in those days than it is now. When they reached the top, the colt broke into a run and they almost flew down the steep incline, while the old lady, frightened almost out of her wits and holding on for dear life, ejaculated at intervals all the way down, "God save the King." Poor Peabody was much mortified, for the town was full of visitors that day returning from the ordination and they passed many carriages whose occupants stared in amazement as the gig flew past and the shrieks of "God save the King" reached their ears.

One of the leading citizens in the latter half of the eighteenth century was Solomon Nelson. His firm adherence to principles which he felt to be right is manifested in the almost unprecedented fact, well authenticated by the elderly residents of the town, that when his son Jeremiah Nelson of Newburyport, was nominated as the candidate of the Federal or Hamiltonian party for Congress from the North Essex district, he, as an ardent Republican (or Democrat as he would be known today), and friend of Jefferson, said emphatically "that Jerry would never get his vote," and although this son was elected not less than eight terms to this position of honorable trust, he persisted bravely in the pledge which he had made. This Jeffersonian principle that "God hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth and that all governments rest solely on the consent of the governed" were principles which he and his Nelson brothers heartily believed in, and none of the glitter and tinsel of effete royalty or cunning commercialism would have any charms for them were they living today.

His favorite brother, Maj. Asa Nelson, and himself were as "one and inseparable." The Major, equally with the brother, was full of the milk of human kindness and had a house always full with the unfortunate, the aged, or all who in any way were in need. His tender heart embraced all living things. It used to be often repeated that one day when his little girl said hastily that she could not see why flies were made, he gently reproved her by saying, "Tut, tut, child, nothing is made in vain." He was an omnivorous reader and had, for those days, an extensive library, many of the works being of solid value. His weekly visits to the emporium of the county, now the city of Salem, gave him many opportunities to add to his collection of books and of them he often availed himself.

The father of Ezekiel and Daniel Webster, Major

Webster of Salisbury, N. H., was often a visitor at Solomon Nelson's house. Mr. Nelson kept a country store and in the winter when the sledding was in prime condition Mr. Webster came with the products of his up-country lands to exchange for West India goods, dried fish, salt, cheap cottons, known as India cottons, and the like. The two hale and stalwart men then in mid-life, both of them intensely patriotic, sitting before the blazing fire in the old-fashioned kitchen of a winter evening would drop into a reflective mood as they discussed the future of their country. Speaking about his children whom he had left behind with the mother in the lonely cottage among the New Hampshire hills, Mr. Webster would say: "Of the two boys, Ezekiel and Daniel, I have great hopes of Ezekiel, but as to Daniel, it is pretty doubtful as to what he will be." What pride and amazement and sadness also, would have been his, had he been enabled to look into the future. Could he have seen Ezekiel reaching the pinnacle of state fame as a jurist and legislator and hardly in mid-life dying by a sudden stroke in the capitol at Concord. It was Mr. Jacob Tyler's arms, another Georgetown resident, that supported him when he fell. Could he also with prophetic vision have seen his Daniel attaining that place in his country's councils which made his name and fame world-wide, it would have been a joy to the father's heart beyond conception.

Another of Solomon Nelson's brothers was Amos Nelson, who built, about 1760, the Charles Chaplin farmhouse, Mrs. Charlotte (Nelson) Chaplin being his great-granddaughter. Among the other descendants of Mr. Nelson are the Nelson sisters, teachers of note in Haverhill; Prof. Henry Saunders (now deceased), a leader in musical circles in Baltimore and Washington; Ex-Mayor Jewett and Doctor Jewett of Haverhill. Amos Nelson's kindness of heart is shown by his buying the freedom of a negro slave known as Flora, who was owned by a family in West Boxford. This manumitted negress lived for many years and in gratitude came annually to see her aged friend always bringing a present of mittens of her own knitting. There is a current story that after two matrimonial ventures and contemplating a third with a widow Balch of Topsfield, on his return from a visit which he had paid to the lady, he was descending Topsfield hill when his harness gave way. Under no restraint the horse ran violently putting him in great danger of loss of life or limb. Afterwards some person asking him what his thoughts were while his horse was madly tearing down the hill he replied with a peculiar grim humor which must have been proverbial with him, "My thoughts were that the widow Balch would be widow Balch still."

The eldest brother, David, lived near the Dummer mill, and to a certain extent was apart from the triple band of brothers who were so identified with the Second parish of Rowley, and perhaps was somewhat more reserved in thought and demeanor than they.

His younger sister Huldah always spoke of him with a certain regard, but perhaps with not as much affection as for the others. For one thing, he was a planter of trees. Two buttonwoods were set out by him in the spring of 1750, his sister Huldah watching him plant them, when she was less than three years of age. She often spoke of it down to the last of her life saying that she stood in the doorway and saw David work. One of these memorial trees was badly decayed more than sixty years ago and was felled; the other is still standing.

Of the sisters, the eldest, Jane, married William Chandler, a cousin of Rev. James Chandler. He was a bookish man and one of the earliest schoolmasters in the parish. One of the two sons was a goldsmith in Salem, and the other a Revolutionary soldier, became, after the war, a resident of Pennsylvania. The next sister, Mary, married William Searle. Another sister, Lucy, married a Dodge, living in Millwood, Rowley; and among her many descendants is Gen. G. M. Dodge of New York city, the man who located the Union Pacific railroad, the first to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Huldah married Elder Samuel Harriman and was familiarly known as "Aunt Harriman," living to be one hundred years old. She was an omnivorous reader and an acute observer of the current events of her day. She often spoke of the distinct sound of the artillery heard by the family during the battle of Bunker Hill and the anxiety and fear felt by all. At her centennial observance in September, 1847, a quiet home affair, a moss-covered floral basket made by Miss A. M. Follansbee of Newburyport (lately deceased at the Old Ladies' Home in that city) was presented to her; and it is an interesting fact that the same basket was in use at the Memorial church at the centennial exercises of Mrs. Braman, a half century afterward, and is still preserved.

The youngest member of this remarkable family, Aunt Mercy, never married, a gentle home-loving woman. One of her peculiar traits in her later years was quietly roaming over the farm lowlands and pressing into the soft and yielding turf in search for springs of water, the walking stick she always carried. One spring still flowing with an abundance of pure water is a proof of her zeal and sagacity.

The father of this family, Solomon Nelson, sr., was very active in parish duties. He was treasurer and collector, and more than all was selected by Mr. Chandler as public reader of religious books during the noon intermissions at the meeting-house, a custom which prevailed at the Congregational church in this town and doubtless in the neighboring churches also. The purpose of it was to prevent light and frivolous conversation during the hour between the morning and afternoon services. In Mr. Nelson's early married life he lived in Mendon, in southern Worcester county, but returned to Rowley and settled on what is now Nelson street, building his house in 1729 on the spot now occupied by the house of Mr. L. S. Gifford. The watering-place in the street near his house is his public memorial. The never-failing spring which supplies it was his discovery probably, about 1740. Some years afterward it was walled about and water conveyed from it to the roadside.

"Aunt Harriman," who has been referred to already, was one of the first teachers of Georgetown. She taught in what was called the "Parish school-house," a building situated on the spot where Edward Sherburne's house now stands. Only girls and small boys went to her school and the course of study consisted of reading, spelling, knitting and sewing. There is a tradition that one day while her school was in session a huge black snake suddenly uncoiled itself from the rafters of the school-house and dropped to the floor, greatly frightening both teacher and scholars.

A later teacher in the "Parish school" was Greenleaf Dole, who received the munificent salary of £2, 13s., per month. He was a noted disciplinarian, and must have been a terror to unruly boys for there is a legend that with one sweep of his arm he once felled a whole class to the floor.

Georgetown's first minister was Parson Chandler. He was called by an unanimous vote of the parish, and ordained in 1732. His salary, as the record reads, was "£110 per year to be Stated by the Standard according as money should grow better or worse and £300 for settlement." He served the church as its pastor for fifty-nine years, until his death in 1791. The following tradition, which has come down to us, shows the humble estimate which he placed upon his own powers as a preacher. He once tried to persuade Elder Asa Chaplin to attend a service at which Whitefield was to preach, but the elder objected saying he had no fault to find with his own minister. "But," said Mr. Chandler, "Mr. Whitefield does not preach as I do. He preaches with power."

He kept a pet baboon, which on one occasion stole Mistress Chandler's best cap and mounted with it to the housetop where his mistress found him with the cherished cap adorning his head, the strings tightly clutched under his chin with one paw.

At Mr. Chandler's funeral a barrel of rum was kept on tap in the dooryard outside the house with one of the good parson's parishioners to dispense it to the thirsty mourners, which service he accompanied with the hearty, if somewhat irreverent invitation: "Walk up and have a drink. It won't cost you a cent. Walk right up, gentlemen. Parson Chandler don't die every day."

It may not be out of place to give a brief sketch of the first Irish people who settled in Georgetown—Mr. and Mrs. Timothy O'Brien, who came here some time about 1835, the woman carrying on her back a pack, which on close inspection proved to be a baby, tied tightly in a bag from the top of which its head emerged in a comical little cap. They stopped at the house of Sylvanus Nelson, who gave them a dinner. They told him that they had recently arrived from Ireland, and were looking for a place to settle. At that time Mr. Nathaniel Nelson, or "Mr. Nat," as he was usually called, lived the house on the corner of Elm, Chestnut, and Main streets, now occupied by Henry Adams. Nathaniel Nelson and his wife enjoyed a reputation for great hospitality and kindness of heart to all who were in need. Perhaps the poor Irish immigrants heard some story of his goodness from their host at dinner, for they went directly from his house to that of "Mr. Nat," who received them with his usual hospitality and invited them to spend a few days with him. He gave Mr. O'Brien some work to do about the place and brought the woman a big piece of new cloth, asking her to make it up for him into sheets and pillow-cases. She had nearly finished these and was no doubt expecting soon to be sent away, when one morning Mr. "Nat" came into the room where she sat at work and asked her if she would take his arm and go out with him for a little walk. He led her across the street to the "cot," which they always called a little house which stood near his own. It had only one room, but this had been fitted up very comfortably with all the conveniences for housekeeping on a small scale, while in one corner stood a bed made up with some of the sheets and pillow-cases which Mrs. O'Brien had been making. As they entered, Mr. Nelson turned to her and said: "This is your home for as long as you wish to stay." The poor woman was overjoyed and in telling the story afterward she always said: "The Queen of England couldn't have felt happier than I did that morning."

Neither Mr. nor Mrs. O'Brien could read or write, but as soon as little Mike, the baby who came into town that day in the bag on his mother's back, was old enough he was sent to school to be educated. After he had been going for several months a letter arrived from the old country and when Mike came home from school his mother gave it to him to read to her. When she found that he could read it no better than she could, she was so much disgusted with the result of his schooling that she promptly took him out, but sent him back again on learning that it took Yankee children more than a few months to learn to read writing. After they had lived Georgetown a few years they renounced the Roman Catholic faith, joined Mr. Braman's church, and had their children baptized. Mr. O'Brien, certainly, and probably his wife, returned to the church of their fathers before they died. They are not of course properly to be classed among the first inhabitants, but as they were the first Irish settlers they seemed worthy of a place in these notes.

It is interesting to know that Capt. Joseph and Richard Boynton once owned the land extending from Pen brook north and east of Pen Brook avenue, and that Ebenezer Boynton, a cousin or brother of Joseph, owned the old Jacob Jewett house in Marlboro now occupied by Lyman Merrill; that Jonathan Boynton, his son, was the first parish clerk and held office until 1740; that the land around Pentucket pond was first settled by the Harrimans and Plumers; and that the first man to build a house in South Georgetown was Jacob Hazen, a carpenter, who built a house on the Red Shanks road in 1717. One of the early inhabitants of South Georgetown was Elder Asa Chaplin who lived in what is probably one of the oldest houses in town—the old house in Chaplin's court now occupied by Mr. Edmonds. The son of this Elder Asa, was Jeremiah, the first president of Colby University. The following item in an old account book has been preserved, and is interesting:

“Dr. June 1, 1799, Elder Asa Chaplin for use of chaise to go to Providence, to see Jeremiah graduate.”

One of the first landholders in Georgetown was Deacon Thomas Mighill, and his grandson, Nathaniel Mighill of Rowley, bought the land on the southerly slope of Baldpate and partially cleared it. He built a portion of the original part of the house now known as “the Baldpate.”

He never occupied it permanently himself, preferring to live in Rowley, but his eldest son, Stephen, moved into it about 1733 or 1734 and became a prominent citizen. He was elected deacon of the church in 1747. His occupation was that of maltster, and his old malt-house was standing thirty or forty years ago. It is said that one of his children lost his life in this house. He was leaning over a tub of malt to look in and losing his balance fell into the tub and was scalded. The Mighills were one of the most aristocratic families in this vicinity and kept negro slaves. One of them, Sabina, was afterward a servant in Parson Chandler's family, and another, Chloe, was bought by Amos Nelson and given her freedom. Doctor Mighill, a grandson of Deacon Stephen Mighill, was a physician here for forty years.

Other families in the parish who were of especial note were the Hazens. Locating on the northern edge of Boxford more than two hundred years ago, some members, a generation later, united with this parish. All the Hazens trace their origin to this locality. Gen. Hazen of the Weather Bureau at Washington, now deceased, whose widow married Admiral Dewey, once visited this part of the town. Interesting stories of "Aunt Jenny Hazen," of Samuel Hazen and others of the name could be told. Before 1800 all of the family removed to New Hampshire.

Beverly Jan^y 3^d 1732/3 Agreeable to the Desire of the Church of Christ in Wenham, that the first Church in Beverly would be present and assisting att the Ordination of the M^r John Warren on the 10th Day of January, after the Letter was read the Church chose the Three Deacons to go as Messengers with the Pastor.

Beverly March 4, 1734/5. At a meeting of the first Church in Beverly was communicated by the Pastor the narrative of the Proceedings of the late Ecclesiastical Council, at Salem, 1734. Att which meeting It was moved that a Book, entitled a just and impartial narrative &c. published by those who style Themselves the aggrieved Brethren, might be laid before the Church, and read in their Presence and Hearing. By some this Motion was not liked, for this reason more especially as They observed because this Book was neither directed to the Pastor nor to the Church directly or indirectly. But the Church generally insisted upon it, that this Book should be read in [or att] a Church Meeting. Till at Length the following Vote was given by the Pastor; viz. whether it be the Desire of the Brethren of this Church that the above mention'd Book be read in their Hearing, at their next meeting and it passed in the Affirmative, and then this meeting was adjourn'd by the Pastor to the 10th Day of March next at Two Clock, P. M.:— When the Church met accordingly, and finished the reading of both the above said Books, and proposed to have a Meeting called and appointed to look into the Church Covenant and the original Foundation of this Church &c and accordingly a meeting was appointed by the Pastor, for this End, to be on y^e 31st of this Instant March at Two of the Clock P. M. and then this meeting was adjourned to the Ninth Day of June at Two of y^e Clock P. M.

March 31st, 1735. Att a meeting of the First Church in Beverly it was voted (after considerable Debate) That this Church do acknowledge the Platform as the Rule of Church Government, and Discipline and That this Church will observe it, as their Rule for the future. The Committee appointed to take into Consideration the Platform of Church Discipline &c are of Opinion That this Church accept of the Platform of Church Discipline, as their Rule of Church Government, nevertheless taking the Liberty to Receive the following articles in their own sense, viz.

[*] 1. They apprehend that the Offices of Pastor and Teacher Chap: 6, Art 5, may both be sustained by the same Person at the same time.

2. That there is no such order of Offices appointed or instituted as Ancient [Videues] to minister in the Church.

3. That by the Heresy and corrupt Opinions spoken of Chap^r 17 Sect: 8, is meant such as destroy the Foundation of Religion, & that by the Corrupt way Sect: 9 is meant the same Thing.

The Rev^d Mr. Champney our Pastor being also with us at the several Meetings we have had in order to Consider the Platform, did also declare his Consent to accept of the Platform as above:—Saving that he farther expressed his Opinion with regard to the 3^d way of Communion and Ruling Elders as follows viz.

1. That he apprehends the 3^d way of Communion cannot prove of Service unless there be a Consociation of Churches.

2. As to ruling Elders. That 1. He cannot see that they are appointed by Divine Authority & 2^d that he apprehends this Church has no present necessity for them, but dos not absolutely determine but they may possibly be serviceable.

All which is humbly submitted,

Robert Hale pr Order.

After This There was something said concerning the other reason of the meeting of the Church, and also it was moved That Ruling Elders might be chosen, whereupon it was Thought adviseable to adjourn: accordingly this meeting of the Church was adjourned to the first Monday in April next.

These proposals are assented to by y^e Delegates of y^e Associat^{ns} met acc: to former Agree^{mt} at Bo[ston] Sept. 13, 1705, to be commended to y^e Several Associat^{ns} of Ministers in y^e Several p^{ts} of y^e Country to be d[uly] consid^d y^t so w^t shall be judged for y^e service of o^r great L^d & his C. Chh. may be farther proceeded In.

2. W^t farth^e steps are to be taken that councils may have y^r due constitution & efficacy In supporting, preserving, & well ordering the Interest of y^e Chh^s in y^e Country = Proposed as follows.

1. That y^e ministers of y^e Gospel In y^e Country form y^mSelves Into Associat^{ns} that may meet at proper times to consid^r such things as may properly lye before y^m relating to y^r own faithfuln^s tow^d Each oth^r & y^e common interest of y^e Chh^s.

And 1. That Each of these Associat^{ns} have a Moderat^r for a certain time, w^o shall continue till another be chosen & w^o may call them together upon emergencies.

2. In These Associat^{ns} 'tis Expected that quest^{ns} & cases of Importance, either provided by them^s or by others presented unto them Sh^d be upon deliberatⁿ Answd.

3. That Advice be taken by y^e associated Past^{rs} from time to time ere they proceed to any Act^{ns} In y^r Chh^s w^{ch} may be likely to produce any Embroilm^{ts}.

4. That y^e Associated Pastors do carefully & lovingly treat each oth^r with y^t watchfuln^s w^{ch} may be of Universal advantage.

5. That If any Minister be accused to y^e associatⁿ w^r to he belongs of Scandal or Heresy, y^e matt^r shall be y^r Examined & if y^e Associated Minis^{trs} find Just Occa^m for It they shall direct y^e calling of y^e Council by w^m such an offender is to proceeded against.

6. That y^e Candidates of y^e Ministry undergo a due trial by some one or other of y^e Associat^{ns} concerning y^r qualificat^{ns} for y^e Evangelical Ministry, & That no particular Past^r or Congregatⁿ Employ Any one In Occasional preaching w^o hath not been recommended by a testimonial under y^e hands of Some associatⁿ.

7. That they Sh^d together be consulted by bereaved Chh^s to recommend unto y^m Such persons as are fit to be Employ^d among them for present supplies, out of w^m they may In due time proceed to choose a Pa[stor].

8. That hereunto may be referred y^e directⁿ of proceedings In any of y^r particular Chh^s abt y^e [convening] of y^e Councils that shall be thought necessary for y^e welfare of y^e Chh.

9. That y^e several associat^{ns} Maintain a due correspondence with one anothe^r that so y^e state Religion may be better known & secured In all y^e Chhs.

10. & Particularly 'tis thought necessary to ye well being of th^{ese} Chh^s y^t all y^e associat^{ns} In y^e Country meet together by th^r respective delegates once In a y^r to concert matters of common concern to all ye Chh^s.

11. Finally that ministers disposed thus to Associate themselves In ye most efficacious manner y y can to prevail with such Ministers, as unnecessarily neglect such Meetings with y^r Brethren in proper Associat^{ns}. That they w^d not expose themselves to such Inconveniences that such Neglects cannot but be attended withal.

2. It is Proposed y^t th^{ese} Associated Pastors wth a proper number of delegates from y^r Severall Chh^s be formed Into a standing or stated Council, w^{ch} shall consult advise & determine all affairs y^t shall be proper matter for y^e consideratⁿ of an Ecclesiastical Council, w^{thin} y^e Respective limits. Except alwaies wⁿ y^e cases are such as y^e Associated Pastors may Judge more convenient to fall under y^e cognizance of some othe^e Council.

3. That to y^s end these Associated Pastors wth y^r respective Chh^s shall consociate & combine acc: to w^t hath been by y^e Synod of th^{ese} Chh^s recommended ; & that they act as consociated Chh^s In all holy watchfuln^s & helpfuln^s tow^{ds} Each othe^r = & That Each Chh. choose or depute one or more to attend y^r Pastors as members of y^e Council In y^e stated sess^{ns} or occasionally, as Emergency shall call for.

4. That these Messengers from y^e several Consociated Chh^s shall be chosen once a y^r at least.

5. It is propounded as that w^{ch} from our beginning hath been recommended that y^e Chh^s thus consociat[ed] for th^{ese} purposes have a stated time to meet In y^r Councils

& once In a y^r seems little enuf, that they may Inquire Into y^e conditⁿ of y^e Chhs, & advise such things as may be for y^e common advantage of our holy Religⁿ but y^e Particular time is best left to y^e determinⁿ of such respective Associat^{ns}.

6. That y^e Associatⁿ shall direct wⁿ y^r is Occasⁿ for y^s Councill to convene In Any Emergency, & shall direct whether y^e whole or only a certain Number of y^e Conso-ciated Pastors & Chh^s shall convene on such Occasⁿ.

7. It seems agreeable wth y^e present conditⁿ of our Chh^s from ye beginning acknowledged, that no Acts In y^e Council are to be rec^d as concluding & decisive for w^{ch} y^r hath not been y^e concurrence of y^e Major Part of y^e Pastors y^r in concerned.

8. The determinat^{ns} of y^e Councils thus provided for y^e neccssities of y^e Chh^s are to be look't on [as] final & decisive except aggrieved Chh^s or persons have weighty reasons to y^e contrary, In w^{ch} case y^r sh^d be provisⁿ for a far th^r hearing & It seems proper y^t y^e Council concerned In y^s Occasⁿ sh^d consist of such Pastors & Chh^s as may be more for number yⁿ y^e former, & that they sh^d be such as shall be directed unto & convened for y^e purpose by y^e Ministers of a next Associatⁿ to that whereto y^s of y^e former Council belonged, Unto w^{ch} y^e Aggrieved sh^d accordingly apply themselves & In this way expect y^e final Issue.

9. If y^e particular Chh. will not be reclaimed by Council from such Gross disorders as plainly hurt y^e common Interest of Christianity, & are not meer tolerable differences In opinion, but are plain sins against y^e command & kingdom of o^r L^d Jes. Cht=. The Council Is to declare y^t Chh no longer fit for Communion with y^e Chh of y^e faithful=

And y^e Chh^s represented In y^e Council are to approve, confirm & ratifye y^e Sentence & withhold from y^e communion of y^e Chh that w^d not be healed.

Nevertheless if Any members of y^e disorderly Chh do not Justifie their disorders = but suitably testifie ag: them, these are still to be rec^d to y^e wonted Communion of y^e Chh^s and if after all due waiting y^e Chh be not recovered, they may upon fitt advice be actually taken In as Members of some oth^r Chh In y^e Vicinity.

In 1833 and 1834 he attended medical lectures at Bowdoin college, after having spent some time in Ohio, and in the spring of 1835 was graduated from Brown University. He commenced the practise of medicine in Kenton, in 1836, which he continued until his death. He was three times elected county treasurer, and was one of the originators of the Hardin Co. A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

REV. WILLIAM BENTLEY.

From the Historical Address by Judge Joseph G. Waters prepared for the celebration of the 150th Anniversary of the establishment of the East Church, observed November 8, 1868.

William Bentley was born in the north part of Boston, on the twenty-second day of June, A. D. 1759, and was the son of Joshua and Elizabeth Bentley. He was named after his maternal grandfather, William Paine of Boston, of whom he was a great favorite and towards whom, Dr. Bentley ever showed so strong an attachment that it almost interrupted the harmonious relation between the parents and the son.

Upon the decease of his grandfather, Dr. Bentley entered in his Diary, the following reference to him.

"1786. The night of Nov^r 1st ended the life of my most worthy grandfather. It was by his generosity, I was educated at Cambridge, and he continued through life, as an unceasing benefactor. May my gratitude be as unceasing as his goodness."

Dr. Bentley entered Harvard College in 1773, at the age of fourteen, in a class quite distinguished for its scholarship, and graduated with high honor in 1777. Soon after leaving college he was appointed a teacher in the Latin grammar school in Boston, but soon exchanged this position for the preceptorship in the North grammar school in that city. He had hardly entered upon his duties there, when he received the appointment of Latin and Greek tutor in Harvard College. He continued in this office till his ordination over this Church, occasionally preaching in the neighborhood of Boston where he became noted as a popular speaker.

He commenced preaching as a candidate (in Salem), on the first Sabbath in May, 1783, and continued with them till the twenty-third day of July following when he received an invitation to a settlement as colleague pastor with Mr. Diman, which he accepted.

During the preceding month, an Act had been passed by the General Court, incorporating the proprietors of the house and providing for a dissolution of the parish on the death of the senior pastor.

The ordination took place on the 24th of September following. The Rev. Mr. Lathrod of the old North Church in Boston preached the sermon, the Rev. Th^s Barnard of Salem made the introductory prayer, Dr. Cooper of Brattle Street Church in Boston made the consecrating prayer, the senior pastor, Mr. Diman, gave the charge, and the Rev. John Prince of the First Church in Salem, the right hand of fellowship.

During the whole of the joint ministry thus inaugurated, the relation between these pastors was inharmonious. Mr. Diman had not regarded with much favor the selection of Mr. Bentley as a colleague, and soon after his induction into office, treated him uncourteously. For nearly two years he neglected to invite him to participate in the rites of the communion, or baptism. Dr. Bentley having a sensitive nature felt these incivilities most keenly and remonstrated against them.

The society sided with him and demanded that Mr. Diman should permit his colleague to enjoy all the privileges of his sacred office. They likewise appointed a committee to devise some measures for restoring the peace and harmony of the society, thus interrupted. This movement of the parish in a degree effected its purpose for soon after Mr. Diman gave his consent that the two pastors should alternately officiate at the communion service.

Harmony was thus restored, for a while, but new causes for discontent arose, which revived the angry feelings between the senior pastor and the people, and occasioned the passing of a vote by the society, on the 19th day of October, 1785, insisting absolutely on Mr. Diman's withdrawal from all services in the pulpit, and promising to pay to him, if he assented to their request, all arrearages due to him from the society—and to meet him in the spirit of peace and harmony. Mr. Diman acknowledged the receipt of this vote in a gentle and forgiving spirit and in reply stated, that he must, under the obligation imposed by his ordination, ever regard it his "duty of using his utmost endeavors to promote true religion among the People." Thus terminated Mr. Diman's official intercourse with the East Society.

As the different phases of this unfortunate controversy pass in review before us, at this distance of time, we are better prepared to form a judgment upon them, than were those personally concerned in it.

Candor and justice alike require us to admit that each party to it failed to manifest that spirit of forbearance and meekness of temper becoming a christian brotherhood.

In the heated zeal of the society to vindicate the cause of their young pastor, they did not properly appreciate the trying circumstances under which Mr. Diman was placed.

For nearly a half century, he had exercised an almost despotic sway over this people, training them to walk in the ways of a theology which admitted no progress save in the iron ruts which an arbitrary priesthood had laid down as the sure and only way to the heavenly kingdom.

How could he bear, with equanimity, as a rival for the favor of his people, this youthful competitor, fresh and jubilant as he then was—full of the spirit of progress—alive to every good work—his liberal mind richly stored with every variety of learning, open to and ready to receive any suggestion of reason that might aid him in interpreting the scriptures—an acknowledged champion for the right of private judgment, in all matters of faith—rejoicing in a heart, sated to its core with every generous impulse to instruct, cheer and elevate the poorer and downtrodden among his fellow beings? How could elements so diverse and heterogeneous ever be expected to assimilate?

Mr. Diman's ministry was an useful one in many respects. He took a very active part in all the improvements and changes made in the house. Outside of the society he had obtained quite a reputation as a learned divine and was frequently called upon to perform public duties. He was chosen chaplain to both branches of the General Court.

He passed away on the eighth day of October, 1788, in the eighty-first year of his life, and the fifty-second of his ministry. There were religious services at the meeting-house on the day of his funeral, the expense of which was borne by the society. Rev. Mr. Swain of Wenham delivered the sermon and Rev. Mr. Forbes of Cape Ann made the prayer. His remains were followed to the grave by all the clergy in the vicinity, the senior members of the Ministerial Association supporting the pall. Mr. Diman was a native of Long Island, and was born on the twenty-ninth of November, 1707, graduated at Harvard College in 1730 and was its librarian from 1735 to the time of his ordination. He was married to Mary, daughter of Timothy and Lois (Pickering) Orne, of this town. She died Nov. 14, 1787, leaving two sons and three daughters. One of the latter married Rev^d Aaron Green of Malden, the father of James D. Green, former pastor of the Unitarian church in Lynn.

Mr. Bentley found, in the commercial character of our people, much to satisfy the demands of his liberal and investigating mind, and consequently he readily assimilated with them. This blending of the peculiar elements which characterized pastor and people, served to develop in Dr. Bentley those catholic and liberal views of christianity, as well as those generous social virtues, for which he was so highly distinguished, and made him so popular as a pastor.

A portrait, drawn in a poem of the late lamented Judd, so closely resembles the character of Dr. Bentley that we almost might suppose that it was intended for him.

“Christ’s minister is one possessed of Christ,
 “Able to reproduce that Christ in others;
 “He’s no schismatic—to no creed subscribes—
 “His ordination more from Heaven than man, “Allows no Government ’twixt him and God;
 “Seeks no patristic but the Gospel model—
 “By function a reformer—not by name—
 “In virtue of his office pledged to Peace
 “Freedom and temperance joined with unity—
 “Parochial were his duties—he was constant true.
 “To cheer the sick, and through the darkened vale
 “To light the dying man—inter the dead—
 “Console afflictions manifold events—
 “Impress the sacred seal on marriage vows—
 “Bishop of the Town schools—he did inspect
 “His diocese—His office had no end.”

In his pulpit exercises he was very interesting and instructive. His prayers breathed the spirit of true devotion and so full were they of his overflowing sympathy for those who sought an interest in them, that he was often carried away by his feelings, on these occasions extending the service much beyond the limit of a patient endurance, even of the most devout listener. It was in admonition of this error, that the clock now hanging before me, was first set up in the front gallery of the old meeting-house, to remind him of the flight of time.

His manner of reading the scripture lesson was very peculiar. After naming the chapter, he would give a paraphrase of the whole of it embodying in his version the spirit of the best commentators and always concluding the service with the words “Here endeth the Collect.”

This part of the exercises was much enjoyed by those of his hearers whose tastes and scholastic attainments had qualified them to appreciate it. But frequently it exposed him to the charge of strangers that he discarded the common version and substituted a Bible made by himself.

This practice must have commenced early in 1791, as would appear from the following entry in his diary of that year: "Jan^y Monday. Introduced yesterday the Lecture proposed in explaining the Scriptures, at the usual time of the reading to the Assembly. The Commentaries are to be entered in a volume reserved for the purpose, with their date to show when delivered."

He did not write out his sermons in full except on special occasions. His style was very peculiar and required the closest attention of the hearer to understand him. The subjects of his sermons were often suggested by current events of the day and prefaced by texts as pertinent as they were odd.

On the first Sunday after his ordination he selected for his text, Acts, 10th Chap., 29th verse, "I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me?" Early in the War of 1812, our government saw fit to transfer the troops from our fort to the frontier. A measure, in his judgment, of questionable policy. He therefore sought to contrast this ill-judged order with the wise provision of the Israelites in distributing their forces to protect the Tabernacle. The words of his text were, "At Parbar westward, four at the causeway, and two at Parbar." I Chronicles, 26th Chap., 18th verse.

He often ventured to discuss in the pulpit, some of the most exciting political problems of the day, and attacked long cherished opinions of many of his hearers with a freedom which sometimes overstepped true prudence. Yet so warm was their attachment to him, and so true and abiding their faith in him as a christian pastor, that many diametrically opposed to him politically, continued under his ministrations, amid that most bitter warfare of party politics, caused by those great national measures, the embargo and the war that followed it.

On these subjects he was bold and uncompromising; for his love of country was most intense and as he identified with it a loyalty to the national government, he considered it a religious duty to advocate their measures freely and fearlessly.

His devotional services were very impressive, and always contained some reference to important events, of a public or private nature, which had occurred during the preceding week.

Our society being composed of seafaring people, there were frequent occasions for offering notes, for returning thanks for mercies received, as well as imploring blessings, the reading of them formed no inconsiderable part of the morning service. Coupled with this practice was a peculiar custom observed by him for many years of his early ministry, of making out a bulletin of the sick, stating their disease, and the stage of it reached by the patient. This was hung up in some conspicuous place in the house, for the purpose undoubtedly of informing the society where their sympathy was called for and their benefactions could be applied.

The founders of our society brought from the parent church the Bay State Psalm Book, and it was used here till sometime after the settlement of Mr. Diman, when he substituted for it Watts' Collection. In November, 1788, Dr. Bentley exchanged it for a compilation made by himself, of more modern hymns with the addition of part of Tate and Brady's version of the Psalms. This was regarded as a great improvement, as it supplied a want that had been long felt by the Society, in having this part of our religious service brought more into harmony with the liberal and catholic spirit of Dr. Bentley's teachings.

During the ministry of his immediate successor, Dr. Flint, the books had become so much dilapidated that a new edition was required. Dr. Flint, at the request of the society, in 1842 prepared the admirable collection now used by us and which contains a large part of Dr. Bentley's compilation.

Dr. Bentley had a great fondness for sacred music, and improved every occasion for cultivating a taste for singing among the young ladies of the society. He procured suitable teachers for them, attended their choir meetings, and frequently invited their classes to his room for practising.

A few yet survive among us, who now take pleasure in remembering how his countenance lighted up while he stood listening to his favorite strains of Pleyel's Hymn, Denmark and Newburg. His services at the communion were solemn and impressive, and on these occasions there was a hymn sung of the Doctor's composition. It may not be out of place to remark, that until 1798, the church owned but one silver cup, which was probably the one formerly called a tankard and came into the possession of the parish in 1747 under a process of dstraint against W^m Brown Esq^r for nonpayment of taxes. Two pairs of silver cups were procured in 1799 and two flagons and two plates in 1800.

In 1786, it was found impracticable to supply the office of deacons. It was therefore voted at a parish meeting in that year, that two persons be selected out of the church or congregation who shall be called wardens and whose duty it shall be to aid the minister in all matters involving the exercise of a discretionary power, in relation to church ordinances, or other matters.

He was one of the pioneers in clearing the way for the introduction of Unitarianism into this country and fearlessly defended it from the bitter assaults of all his ministerial brethren in the vicinity.

He believed in the fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man. That, to be a true christian, one must deny himself and do all the good he can to others. He must seek out the sick, destitute and suffering, from whatever cause, relieve, instruct and elevate them. This was the Gospel which Christ proclaimed to him and which he delighted not only to preach, but to fulfil, and in accomplishing it was indeed a mighty evangelist. He despised all cant and hypocrisy in religion and was unsparing in denouncing a dissembler.

The late Dr. James Freeman, of King's Chapel, Boston, was his classmate and lifelong friend, but their college attachments ripened into a mutual fraternal affection, when their minds came into full harmony on matters of a religious faith. Each of them emerged, about the same time, from the shadows of a cold and gloomy theology, into the clear sunlight of a liberal faith, and ever after, they shone with an undiminished lustre, as a bright constellation in our theological formation. He was the first minister to exchange with Dr. Freeman, and in his diary of Oct. 26th, 1788, thus refers to it. "I exchanged with Mr. Freeman of the Kings Chapel, the first instance of this ministerial service between churches with and without Liturgies."

In his earliest printed discourse, he thus portrays a true christian. "When," says he, "a man is found, who does not profess much, nor despise all, who is pure from guile, peaceable in his life, gentle in his manners, easily dissuaded from revenge, with a heart to pity and relieve the miserable, impartial in his judgment and without dissimulation,—this is the man of religion. This is an apostolic description of a good man; and whatever opinions he may have, and he has a right to choose for himself, this man is after God's own heart."

On another and later occasion, while ordaining a young brother to the ministry, he exhorts him to be ever zealous in good works, telling him "to be rather employed in one act of Charity, than expounding the whole Apocalypse."

A few months after, on April 25, 1788, he writes to Dr. Freeman: "I have adopted many opinions abhorrent to my early prejudices, and am still ready to receive truth upon proper evidence, from whatever quarter it may come. I think more honor is done to God in rejecting Christianity itself, in obedience to my Convictions, than in any fervor, which is pretended towards it, and I hope that no poverty, which I can dread, or hope I can entertain, will weaken my resolution to act upon my Convictions.

The only evidence I can have of my integrity is a good life and as to Faith,—his can't be wrong, whose life is in the Right. You are acquainted with my avowed disbelief in the Trinity or of any being who governs or influences human affairs, but God the Father, etc."

Before Dr. Freeman's ordination, Dr. Bentley had been visited by Rev. Wm. Hazlitt, an Unitarian clergyman from England, and a friend of Dr. Priestley. Wm. Hazlitt, the author, was his son and was born during his father's residence in this country,* which extended through two years. Mr. Hazlitt was the guest of Dr. Bentley and occasionally supplied his desk. He also preached at the First Church, as well as the North Church, in this town, but he failed to please either of them, as they were not prepared to receive his views of christianity. While in Salem he compiled Priestley's catechism, which was adopted by Dr. Bentley as a substitute for the Westminster catechism which had been in use in our society from its foundation.

After leaving Salem, Mr. Hazlitt, removed to Hallowell, Maine, where he made an ineffectual attempt to establish an Unitarian church, then returned to Boston, and after preaching there a short time, embarked for England and afterwards settled at Wem, in Shropshire.

Dr. Bentley's bosom was filled with kindness towards all who needed aid of any kind, and in administering it he never stopped to inquire to what society they belonged; it was sufficient to know that they lived within the old parish lines; he hastened to their relief, ascertained their wants, then sought out some parishioner who could supply them, for he had a carte blanche for all such purposes.

He regarded the whole eastern section of the town as a diocese over which he had an exclusive jurisdiction and whenever there was occasion, this "Man of Ross" would be found in all weather bent on his mission of mercy, laden with articles of comfort for the sick and destitute.

The children throughout the parish eagerly sought to pay him obeisance and were recognized by him with some token of his regard.

"They gladly followed, with endearing wile,
To pluck his gown and share the good man's smile."

In his daily walks among his parishioners, he noticed every change going on about their dwellings, and upon his return home, referred to it in his diary. He also learned the arrival and departure of every vessel belonging to them, which were likewise thus noted. I have seen several pages of his daily record thus filled with notices of new buildings, and repaired ones, also names of vessels and their masters, their tonnage, time of sailing and place of destination. One of his entries contained the names of twenty-one sea captains, belonging to his society, then absent at sea.

There was not a single vessel launched here during his ministry which was not seen by him and referred to in his diary. Upon the arrival of any intimate friend, he would be welcomed in it by some appropriate greeting often indited in Latin or French.

He took a peculiar interest in our military institutions and always attended military musters of which he made mention both in his journal and the newspaper he had charge of. He was an enrolled member of the military company in his ward, attended their meetings regularly, and often served on their committees. On more than one occasion while witnessing a parade, he was honored by a marching salute of the troops under the order of their commanding officer.

The various charitable associations in this town always found in him a zealous friend and supporter. I can hardly doubt that it was principally owing to his suggestion and labors, that the East India Marine Society had its origin and support for many years. Its first board of officers was composed of his personal friends, and some of them were his most influential parishioners. He prepared its first articles of association and was its leading counsellor for many years. His collection of curiosities was the foundation of their valuable museum, which has been so long one of the chief attractions of strangers to our city. He usually furnished its members on their departure for foreign ports, with the localities where valuable specimens might be found, and with prepared directions for preserving them.

The Marine Society had been in operation for many years before Dr. Bentley came here, but as its principal members belonged to the East Parish, he soon became interested in its charitable objects, and at one time when its resources were nearly exhausted, made an eloquent appeal to the public in its behalf, which was successful in renewing its means of usefulness.

Masonry was another subject to which he gave great attention. I find several references in his diaries to proceedings of meetings held at his house by officers of lodges. He was very often called upon to deliver masonic addresses in other places and many of them have been published.

Being so alive to every thing affecting the business and happiness of his parishioners, he was drawn into intimate relations with them and his visits among them were of the most cordial, familiar character. Every day in the week found him enjoying their hospitality and wherever he went he was met with a hearty welcome both from the young and old. He usually retired at an early hour, but until its arrival, he kept up such a constant outpouring of quaint remarks, amusing anecdotes, and instructive hints, from his richly stored mind, that the regret for the parting guest was as deeply felt as had been the welcome for the coming one.

During the summer months, a week seldom passed without his inviting a company of young ladies on an excursion to the seaside, to gather marine plants or shells, of which he made a study, instructing them in the character and uses of each specimen.

Natural history was one of his favorite studies, and his researches in it were perhaps quite as extensive as those of any student of that day. Among his manuscripts will be found frequent references to rare plants and animals which had been subjected to his examination. Seldom was a strange fish caught in our neighboring waters, which was not preserved and sent to him to be named.

The collection of coins and rare books was another of his favorite pursuits, and to gratify him in these respects was a leading object of every ship-master of our parish who went abroad. Scarcely a vessel arrived that did not bring valuable contributions to his cabinet or library, so that some of his collections were indeed very rare and valuable and often consulted by every virtuoso in the neighborhood.

The coins were mostly transmitted to his friend, Judge Winthrop of Cambridge. All the specimens in natural history thus furnished were suitably arranged in their respective classes, and upon the establishment of the East India Marine Society, made an important addition to its valuable museum.

He was a man of the most indefatigable industry. Rising at a very early hour in the morning, he took his accustomed walk upon the Neck, to enjoy, upon his favorite hill, the picturesque view there presented to the eye. It is near the upper fort, and was, for many years, distinguished by a brick monument erected by one of his parishioners in commemoration of the seat he had selected.

He then returned to his study and entered upon the duties of the day, the first of which, on Monday, was writing the two sermons for the next Sabbath, and he seldom left the room till they were completed. He was very careful to prepare new discourses as he disliked to repeat one. In reference to this, he writes on one occasion, "I preached two old sermons, with as great apprehension of guilt, and as much confusion, as though I had stolen from my neighbors. It is the fault, in this case, that by a violation we get hardened, God forgive me."

His discourses being finished, he attended to his correspondents who were quite numerous, both in this country and abroad, and if he could find a spare hour before dinner he devoted it to a call on some friend. In the afternoon he spent one or two hours in reading Greek.

The other days in the week were similarly improved by him, varied only by the substitution of other writings for the sermons. Part of every Tuesday he appropriated for the reading of French; of every Wednesday, Latin; every Thursday, Spanish and Italian; Friday, German, Dutch, Slavonian and their kindred dialects; Saturday to philology, in relation to the versions and texts of the Hebrew and Greek sacred scriptures.

He read with facility more than twenty different languages, and was very familiar with Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Arabic and Persian. He wrote and spoke in most of the popular languages of Europe. The credentials of the Tunisian Ambassador were sent from Washington to be translated by him.

In glancing over one of his manuscripts I found quotations from several of the ancient languages, especially Hebrew, written in a style of singular elegance.

During each week, he prepared a record of all the marriages, births, baptisms and deaths, which had occurred in the parish, and it was filled with the most minute details. In the report of deaths, he gave the sex, parentage, age, residence, employment, condition of deceased, and every other circumstance peculiar to the case. The marriage report was equally as circumstantial. At the end of the year, each of these was collected into tables, classified and entered in books prepared for the purpose. He also made similar but separate summaries of baptisms attended by him during the year.

In addition to all these great drafts on his industry and patience, he contributed to the Gazette at first, and afterwards to the Register, newspapers in this town, nearly two columns of closely printed matter, twice a week for nearly thirty years. They were made up of news-items and various departments of human knowledge, collected by him from the foreign and home journals of the day, and were regarded as prodigies of learning and labor. In allusion to them, President Adams in one of his letters to Dr. Bentley, playfully salutes him as "Doctor of Physicks, Dr. of Philosophy, Dr. of Laws, and D. D."

Nor was this all. Beside the diaries to which I have referred, he kept constantly by him, a note book, in which he recorded his criticisms of new publications, &c. These manuscripts filled thirty-two bound volumes, most of them in a folio form, thirteen of them being diaries, in which he daily entered all events referring to him, personally, or to the parish.* But amid all these occupations he found time to fulfil all his pastoral duties with the most remarkable punctuality and fidelity.

He devoted two afternoons every month to the catechising of the children. At one time he delivered to his parishioners a course of lectures on English grammar and geography. He was a member of the school committee for many years, and on one occasion took charge of one of the public schools and taught it for several weeks during a vacancy occurring by the resignation of the teacher.

For many years he furnished his friend and correspondent, Professor Ebeling of Hamburg, with materials for his great work on the History and Geography of the United States, one volume of which is dedicated to William Bentley. The papers, thus furnished by Mr. Bentley, form a large part of the Ebeling Collection, now deposited in Harvard College Library through the liberality of Israel Thorndike Esq^r of Boston, by whom they were purchased in Europe, in 1818.

During the time when the public mind was much excited here in favor of inoculation against the spread of the small-pox, hospitals were established in different parts of the town. The one on the Neck, he visited every Sunday afternoon, after the church service was concluded, and preached to the patients. There is a series of his manuscripts endorsed by him, "inoculation service." There were found at his decease, thirty-five hundred sermons which are now deposited in Tufts College Library.

His open heart and familiar acquaintance with foreign languages, were often the means of introducing to him many strangers, who were then attracted to this country. Among them was that illustrious statesman, Albert Gallatin, a native of Geneva. When he came here he was but 19 years of age. After serving for a short time as a private soldier in our army he went to the Province of Maine in search of employment, but failing in his object he started for Boston. While on his way there he stopped over night in this town. He was quite destitute and sought an introduction to Mr. Bentley and made known to him his wants which were promptly relieved. Mr. Bentley's influence secured for Mr. Gallatin, an appointment as French instructor in Harvard College. After leaving there, Mr. Gallatin settled in Pennsylvania, and rose in rapid succession to the highest offices of trust and honor in the country. He died at Altona, New York, in 1849.

At another time a priest of the Roman Church in Boston, addressed a letter to Mr. Bentley, soliciting his aid in procuring a suitable hall here where the writer might give a lecture explanatory of the rites and doctrines of his church. Mr. Bentley at once found a suitable place for the purpose, invited the stranger to his house and kept him as a guest for several days, much to the horror and indignation of many of the religious community here.

Bigotry or intolerance never actuated him in dispensing courtesies of either social intercourse or ecclesiastical proprieties. Adopting the catholic sentiment of his favorite political teacher, that "errors of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat them," he gladly welcomed to his pulpit all christians of every name, sect, or color.

I have heard discourses there from a Methodist, Calvinist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Episcopalian, of Scotch, English and African nativities.

"Toiling in the Earthly vineyard
Many bands have found a place !
Some are nearing to the Summit,
Some are at the Mountain's base."

His political affinities and extensive learning brought him into full sympathy with many of the leading statesmen and scholars of Virginia. The late President Jefferson, and Bishop Madison, evinced the highest appreciation of his character. During the administration of the former gentleman, Dr. Bentley was selected as the candidate for the chaplaincy in Congress but he declined that office.

Sometime later, when Mr. Jefferson was maturing his plans for establishing the University of Virginia, which was incorporated in 1819, he consulted him about it and tendered to him the honor of its Presidency. But he refused all these honors on the ground that "he had been so long wedded to the East Church, he could not think of asking a Divorce from it."

The honor of a Doctorate in Divinity was conferred by Harvard University upon him, a few months before his decease. It came too late to heal the wounded feelings of Dr. Bentley, in being so long overlooked by his Alma Mater and too late for her to enjoy the benefit of the will he had made in her favor.

Piqued by her tardy acknowledgment of his claims, he had, a short time before, revoked the bequest made to her, and given all his valuable books, manuscripts, and rare curiosities, to Alleghany College at Meadville, and the American Antiquarian Society at Worcester. The College received his theological and classical books and was made richer in that department than any other institution in the West. The trustees immediately caused a building to be erected, which was to be called Bentley Hall, in honor of his memory. On the 5th of July, 1820, its corner stone was laid covering a plate on which this name was inscribed. But the College soon fell into other hands and the library and the building have lost all association with the name of the illustrious donor.

Fortunately for his memory, a better fate attended his bequest to the Antiquarian Society. Upon the receipt of his valuable gifts the Society passed resolutions recognizing the great learning and talents of Dr. Bentley and the inestimable value of this contribution to their library, and a suitable accommodation was provided for them in alcoves superscribed with his name.

In this collection are many rare Persian, Arabic and Chinese manuscripts, scarce pamphlets, choice works of art, and a mass of correspondence which the Doctor maintained with the eminent scholars and statesmen of his day among whom were the Ex-Presidents J. Adams, Jefferson and Madison.

Dr. Bentley died very suddenly of an attack of angina pectoris, on the evening of the 29th December, 1819, immediately after returning from a visit.

He was buried from the meeting-house, where appropriate religious services were observed and an eloquent tribute was paid to his memory by Edward Everett, then professor of Greek literature in Harvard University.

AN ADDRESS ON REV. WILLIAM BENTLEY

BY MARGUERITE DALRYMPLE,
WRITTEN WHEN IN HER 87TH YEAR.

Miss Dalrymple first gave this address from memory, without notes, Nov. 26, 1897, before the Woman's Alliance of the Second Church, Salem, Mass. She was in the East Church, which then stood at the corner of Essex and Hardy Streets, on that Sunday when Dr. Bentley closed the service and started for Marblehead to help save the frigate Constitution.

Would that it were in the power of the writer to do justice to the life and character of the distinguished citizen, the erudite scholar, the enlightened patriot, and the broad-minded philanthropist who was for thirty-six eventful and trying years, the faithful and devoted pastor of the East Church.

He came to Salem a young man, endowed with uncommon powers, a student of a rare stamp, and a student, ardent and industrious, he remained through life. He believed the Scripture "If the truth make you free, you shall be free indeed," and he sought for truth, he sought for knowledge, in all directions, through the domains of nature, of science, of literature and of art. He was a fine linguist and even at that early day, was the only good Arabic scholar in the United States. He sought for truth in the Orient and found much, long before "The Light of Asia" appeared.

As a citizen he identified himself with the town in all its interests. It was then divided into two school districts by what is now called Washington street. The school-houses were one story wooden buildings.

Soon after he came a sad event proved the quality of his citizenship. The master of the lower school suddenly died, and the school committee directed the school to be closed. As soon as he heard of it, he went to the committee to protest against the closing of the school. To this it was replied that it must be as they had no teacher for it. He said "Gentlemen have the school opened in the morning. I will teach it till you can provide a suitable teacher." The report, spread with almost electric rapidity, that Parson Bentley was going to teach them, brought every boy, next morning, promptly at the hour for opening, where they found him at the school-house waiting for them. After saluting them he walked into it, not amidst a mob of rushing boys, but at the head of quite an orderly procession.

His style of dress, severely plain, had often attracted their notice. His silver cuff-buttons, knee-buckles and shoe-buckles were articles of use not ornament. The long academic robe with its ample sleeves, the broad-brimmed hat, shelter alike from sun and rain, the snow-white minister's band around his neck, and his nice hands, were objects of remark, but his grace of motion, and elegance and affability of manner, captured their unbounded admiration. Above all, his cheerfulness of look, tone and word, changed the atmosphere of that school-room entirely. It was no longer a prison and its discipline a torture. Work was no longer weariness.

He was an ideal teacher. Before commencing the routine work, he spoke to the boys of the dignity of their human nature, the grand powers of the mind, in which consisted their likeness to the Infinite God, their Heavenly Father. That to cultivate the mind, which is our duty and ought to be our pleasure, would increase and beautify this Divine likeness.

The boys stood straighter and looked taller. They had never heard of this august relationship before, nor of its obligations. Their work commenced. The boys noticed how carefully he handled the book which was passed to him. He opened to the page of the reading lesson. He spoke to them of the writer, of the time when he lived, of the subject and its purport, and then, with all the magic of his rhetorical power, he read it to them. Was this reading? They had never heard anything like it. It was alive, invested with a charm they never dreamed of. Then he went through the lesson, paragraph by paragraph, pointing to the difficult words, showing how they were spelled, how pronounced, and then sent them to study. They had never studied so before. Oh! if they could only attain to the grace of this accomplished scholar. The boys surprised themselves if they did not surprise their teacher, when they read the lesson.

Grammar was not included in the curriculum of the three R's. No one heard the words orthography, etymology, or syntax, but every spelling and reading lesson gave opportunity for much instruction. He made them go over their spelling lessons aloud with him, before studying them, and explained to them how one letter had power over another and could nullify it; for instance how that h, though only a breath, could, when coming after p, utterly deprive it of its sound, and compel it to a partnership where both letters should assume a new name f, as in the word philosophy. He never permitted them to stumble blindly over the lesson, which had a new interest every time, because of the new and important instruction he gave them. Before every lesson in arithmetic, he explained its utility and the necessity of mastering it, if the scholar desired, as he ought, to possess the power of knowledge. How important this was in all great operations, and that hands, with educated brains to direct them, did and always could, accomplish wonders. In proof he would adduce the glories of Egypt, Greece and Rome. No day passed without its excursion, if brief, into some broad field of time or space. No one, in those days, heard of ethical culture, but whenever was there more thorough moral training than there was then in that East parish school-house?

There were no more poutings, tears, obstinacy or truancy,—of course there were no more punishments. His government was by reason, not by force. The boys recognized him as their friend, always kind and helpful.

During their writing lessons after giving them general directions as to their position, placing their books, holding their pens, &c., he would be going from desk to desk, mending pens and giving advice. His cheerful and hopeful look, his smile of encouragement, were inspirations to effort.

When the new teacher came, the school was in admirable order and discipline. He did not separate from his boys nor from his interest in their progress and welfare. He had been their faithful and affectionate teacher and they were his grateful, admiring and devoted friends through life. Who can measure the power of his influence? Those boys became able, energetic and useful men, and the success of their lives, with deepest and most heartfelt gratitude, they were proud to ascribe to their beloved friend and teacher, Parson Bentley.

Salem being an important seaport, the young lads' ambition was to seek their fortune on the high seas, to ascend from cabin boy to captain and perhaps to merchant.

He knew well all the vessels, their ports of destination, and the young people going in them. He would have talks with them about the countries to which they were going, their productions, their peoples, their governments, their places on the scale of civilization, and the opportunities to increase their stock of useful knowledge, and he would ask them to bring him something from these places, an old book if they could get it, and when the vessels came back, his young friends would bring him mementos of their travels, often rare curiosities. These were carefully placed in his cabinet which, at the time of his death, was richly stored with a most valuable collection. This cabinet, with all his paintings and engravings, he left by his will to the American Antiquarian Society at Worcester. He left also to this Society his German books, and his manuscripts, not of his own hand. He left to Meadville, then in its struggling infancy, his classical and professional books, nearly seven hundred volumes. What a bequest! And how serviceable it must have been to that institution. It is truly wonderful that he managed to obtain a library, so large and so valuable, when we take into view the smallness of his income.

He was settled at a salary of a thousand dollars a year, but he had such sympathy for the embarrassments of his people in the troubled times, that he receipted in full for eight hundred dollars. He must have restricted his personal expenses very much to enable him to do the works of charity which were unintermitted.

No pastor was ever more closely united to his parish; no parish was ever more closely united to its pastor. His church was indeed his family and he held the most cordial relations with it.

His calls on his parishioners were not perfunctory matters which must be performed so many times in the year, short, ceremonious and stately, with the lucky escapement of a card when the lady of the house happened to be absent. No indeed! He carried his heart full of kindest interest in their weal or woe.

In order to understand his noble work as a pastor, it must be remembered that he came to Salem just after the revolutionary army was disbanded. That army had, through terrible sufferings, achieved the independence of their country. They had freed it from its galling foreign yoke. They and the rest of the people had now a country whose peace, whose freedom, had been attained through their self-sacrificing heroism. They had, too, a Congress. It had done nobly in the past, sustaining the country through the long and exhausting war, but it could do nothing now to show how highly the services of this grand army were appreciated. It had no power to levy a tax. It could not by that means raise a dollar.

Let us bear in mind that the country's foreign debt for means to carry on the war was fifty-four millions of dollars and their domestic or state debt was twenty-five millions. All that the Congress could do was done. It gave to the brave and victorious army certificates of the country's indebtedness and its promise to pay as soon as able. These men returned with their certificates to homes depleted by eight years' struggles. They needed sustenance, and what is so imperative as want? Under the stress of hard circumstances, they, like Esau, sold to greedy and far-sighted speculators, for a few shillings, the hard-earned recompense their certificates would have entitled them to receive, and had the added aggravation to see these men pile up fortunes on them.

The good pastor's broad mind and generous heart grasped the situation. These men must be sustained and encouraged in these times that tried men's souls. But did they not try the women's also? In the most disastrous conditions their fortitude stood firm to sustain the men's courage. The good pastor resolved that, with the aid of the heroic women, their poverty, though it might depress, should not degrade them. That they should feel by the respect shown them that their great and hard sufferings in the cause of liberty were gratefully appreciated. He would call at the house of one of the poorest of his flock some fine morning to say that "if the lady would not be specially engaged, he would like to take tea with her and her family that afternoon. And when the proud and grateful lady would reply that he would be most welcome, he would say,

"My dear Madam, will you do me the favor to invite so and so," mentioning the names of six or eight of his unfortunate parishioners, to which she would reply, "Certainly sir," and after the parting salutation would retire to plan how to provide for the entertainment. If she happened to have corn meal, potatoes and a little piece of pork, it would be an easy matter, for shores were clean then and Neptune's domains unpolluted and abounding in fish. Some of her family or neighbors would go out and in a short time bring her an ample supply of fish for her to fry for supper. This with her nice potatoes and corn cakes,—for which some dear mother, sister or friend would bring butter,—would make a feast for Olympus. If some one should bring a basket of apples to grace her hospitable board what need would there have been of gold or silver cake.

While she was planning, a basket was brought by the grocer's man with the dear pastor's best respects, containing an abundance for the party, plenty of baker's flour loaves, and pans of gingerbread, butter and cheese, tea and sugar, a big salt fish, and last not least, pipes and tobacco. Here was everything really necessary, provided by the pastor's kind and thoughtful generosity, but she would not give up her own hospitable plan, her nice fried fish, potatoes and corn cakes. When the supper was ready, so appetizing and nice, was there not a feast, not for the stomach merely, but for the heart and brain?

Every one tried with kindest courtesy to make it a happy occasion to all and conversation was kept up in cheery, lively tones. The pastor and company came at two o'clock in the afternoon and he met them so graciously, so cheerfully, he put them all at ease. There was no patronizing condescension on his part. All, by his cordial courtesy, were on his level. He was an admirable questioner and knew how to elicit from each the thrilling tales of past experience. One story would follow another, keeping interest keenly alive and whiling away the hours till ten o'clock came, the good pastor then going home richer with the knowledge gained from their books of life and happier because he had witnessed their enjoyment, and they, gratified beyond measure by the frank and respectful sociability of the dear pastor and the cordial hospitality of their host and hostess. Could any club do better?

There were no parish houses then, but the good pastor had a way of building them as beautiful as it was unique. He had so faithfully preached the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, that the well-to-do people of his parish felt that these pastor's parties, as they were called, which were of frequent occurrence, ought not to be managed and sustained by him alone. They felt too, that the freedom, the peace, and security of their homes they owed to these unfortunate brothers and that they ought to assume their share of the country's indebtedness. So they were glad to enter into their pastor's plans for social gatherings.

There were a goodly number of merchants and seafaring men in his congregation amply able to provide. He would call at one of their houses some fine morning to inquire, as before, if the lady of the house would be disengaged that afternoon as he would like to take tea with her and her family. And when the lady assured him she would be most happy to receive his visit he would suggest the names of some very unfortunate, saying he would like to meet them, if she would be so kind as to invite them. The lady and her husband could think of more and were richly repaid for their thoughtfulness by their dear pastor's evident gratification at seeing so large a party.

Sometimes the gentlemen and ladies of his parish gathered together a large number of his flock, of which he had no intimation until he received his invitation. These parties were great social helps in those trying times. They were not only a means of better acquaintance but of a better estimation and of mutual assistance. They truly promoted the spirit of the "Lend-a-Hand Clubs." They were, in a manner, lyceums where the momentous topics of the day were freely discussed, and the pastor, from his ample stores of knowledge, could hold up the solemn lessons of history to throw light on present events and their tendencies and to teach that equity and brotherly love should rule in men's hearts and lives.

There were no hospitals then, no Society of Associated Charities, no King's Daughters, but this good pastor, aided by the willing hearts and open hands of his parish, formed an effective commissariat in every emergency. He had but to give a few items to the lady of the house to which he had gone for aid, ending with, "My dear Madam, your own benevolent heart will know better than I could suggest what is required in this case." Three or four such calls would open as many depots of relief which would fully provide what was necessary and more. He gave to all who were able to contribute, the privilege of the opportunity to join in these works of mercy, and it did not matter whether this case of need was in their own parish or belonged to the great congregation of the unchurched outside. No words could do justice to his gentle kindness to the sick, the suffering or the afflicted, nor how like the bright sunshine were his visits, nor what peace of God his benediction left with them.

He took much outdoor exercise and went down to the "Neck" for a constitutional every day when not stormy, and he frequently was the first to spy returning vessels. Capt. George Crowninshield, a highly esteemed parishioner had a tower built for him on the highest hill. It had a square base of granite masonry but the tower was of brick and wood. It had a set of plank steps, set into the masonry, winding to the top which was a heavy plank floor. A flag-staff was firmly inserted in this and from it the flag, telling of the safe arrival of some expected vessel, floated at the top, or drooped at half-staff giving notice of sorrowful news impending. Grateful to his young friend for this testimony of respect and affection, the good pastor, spyglass in hand, delighted to climb to the top to seek for good news from the Ocean. This edifice, called "Bentley's Rock," remained for some years, but a vandalism, inexcusable among boys, doomed it to destruction and scattered the bricks and stones after they had battered them down so that not a trace is left of the tower which gave such pleasure to the good Pastor and was so serviceable to the community as a lookout and which, could it have been left, would have been a memento of the affectionate pastorate of a hundred years ago.

At last after weary waiting we had a government, and the second Congress under Washington's administration adopted Hamilton's noble and equitable plan for settling the Nation's affairs,—a plan as just as it appeared to be generous. The government assumed the indebtedness of the individual states as well as of the United States and its paper rose immediately from two shillings and sixpence to twenty shillings in the pound, giving an impetus to enterprise unexampled before. Commerce started into energetic life and the dear pastor had a season of heartfelt rejoicing with his flock, so long depressed. Our ships were on every sea and when hostilities broke out between Great Britain and France, they had the carrying trade of the world and reaped a rich harvest of profits. This prosperity was not, however, to last long. The first note of trouble ahead was the British order in council declaring a blockade of French ports from the Elbe to Brest. This was retaliated by the French decree blockading the British Islands. Every one of our vessels which should attempt to run the blockade would be in danger of capture and confiscation. Not only in this time of fear and grief for the loved ones of whose fate they were ignorant, did his parish realize the faithful service of their pastor, but in the dreary and discouraging time when between British orders in council, French decrees, our own embargos, and, last not least, the Non-Intercourse Act, our vessels, not captured, lay mouldering at the wharves. His heroic service in sustaining his people's courage, stood side by side with his noble efforts to allay the bitterness of party strife between two great political parties. The Federalists advocating a consolidated government, and the Republicans maintaining the individual sovereignty of the States.

Dr. Bentley was a Republican, earnest and steadfast, and he energetically, by tongue and pen, maintained the principles of his party and showed to the people the warnings to the future by the lessons of the past. He furnished the foreign summary and the leading editorial to the Essex Register, then the emphatic voice of truth and reason for the County. During the time immediately preceding, and through the war of 1812, how faithfully he portrayed the dignity of patience, the heroism of fortitude, when the aggressive arrogance of the British claiming the right of search caused a thrill of indignation throughout the land. He stood among his people like a prophet of old, guarding them against despondency and heralding victory and success by the light of reason in his steady lamp of hope.

Towards the close of the war, a British force under Gen. Ross sailed up the Chesapeake, landed, and perpetrated its disgraceful outrage on our new capital, Washington, by burning its public buildings, and then turned northward to commit further deeds of destruction. All hearts trembled for Baltimore whither they were bound. The troops stationed there, aided by the militia, forced them to retire with the loss, among many others, of Gen. Ross who was killed in the battle. The good news was brought to Salem on Sunday. A gentleman entered the front door of the East Church, in the middle of the sermon and walked toward the pulpit. Dr. Bentley stopped and leaned forward, saying, "What news, Sir?" On receiving the answer he stretched up his arms at full length, exclaiming in loud exulting tones, "Glory to God, Glory to God, Baltimore is saved!" At this the joyful exclamations of the people filled the house with a mighty sound and pastor and people, moved by one impulse, hastened out to hear the full account of the glad tidings.

On another Sunday, in the middle of the service, one of the parish, Capt. George Crowninshield, came to the western end window, which was in the pew of Deacon James Brown, and told him of the rumor that the Constitution was in Marblehead harbor, in danger of capture by two British cruisers. Dr. Bentley stopped at once to inquire "Mr. Brown, is there any news?" And when the news was reported he said, "This is a time for action not words, let us go to do what we can to save the Constitution and may God be with us, Amen." Seizing his hat he rushed out with the men, each resolved to do and dare his utmost. A highly esteemed member of his parish, Capt. Joseph Perkins, was keeper of the light on Baker's island. He was a most skilful pilot and knew every rock, shoal and channel of the locality. He saw the Constitution's peril and resolved to save her as he alone could. He went to her in his little boat and assumed his duty as pilot. The tide was at ebb and the commander of the frigate seeing the shoal water in the little channels through which the pilot was steering the precious vessel, so dear to the country and to him, was dismayed at the risk. However, the pilot persevered till he had brought her into a safe place under the protection of our forts. What a thanksgiving there was over this heroic feat of her salvation by our brave and skilful townsman.

The first Catholics in Salem were French people, refugees from British tyranny. They were few in number and poor. Bishop Cheverus came, as soon as he heard of them, to their relief. They needed care and they needed sympathy. There were no travelling conveniences then and in cases of emergency he could not get or send to them in time. They must have help near at hand. To whom should he apply ? There were St. Peter's Episcopal and two other Orthodox churches all having the same creed as his. He did not go them. He went to the young pastor, so liberal in his belief and preaching, who was the first preacher of liberal christianity in Salem and by these Orthodox people called an infidel. Through that mysterious telegraphy of God, by which great souls know and appreciate each other, he came to him in perfect confidence that there would be no attempts to proselyte them. Faithfully did the good pastor care for these unfortunate people. He spoke French like a Parisian and how glad were they in their own tongue to tell the story of their sorrows to this good friend and how they appreciated his kind and sympathetic visits, charitable in every sense of the word. His respectful sympathy won their hearts and they loved him as they did their good Bishop and no friendship was ever more sacred and sincere, more honorable and heartfelt, than that between the good Catholic Bishop and our beloved pastor:

Returning from a constitutional after the sunset of a bitterly cold Saturday afternoon he saw, on Court street, then our market for hay and country wood, a man pacing back and forth by a wood cart, disheartened by cold and disappointment. The only thing to help was to buy the wood, which he did, telling the man to lay the wood carefully by the sidewalk so as not to impede the foot passengers or to interfere with the cart road, because it could not be taken care of till Monday morning. The Doctor was busy in some study about midnight when he heard some one at the wood. Carefully covering his light he looked through an orifice in the window shutter and saw to his astonishment a woman going down the opposite street with a log of wood in her arms. She went into the yard of a house where lived a man degraded by intemperance. In a few minutes she returned for another log. In a short time she came again for another, looking cautiously around each time to be sure that no one was on the street to see her. The good man stood spellbound at his post of observation. She came out again but not empty handed. She was bringing back one of the logs. After depositing it on the pile she hurried back with flying feet for another and another, throwing down the last with force as if to say, "I have not stolen, I have not taken what does not belong to me," and she walked away down the street with proud steps. The good pastor was profoundly impressed by this battle between temptation and conscience. How it was decided by the victorious conscience he could not know. The time which must elapse before he could send relief to her seemed long to him. Early on Monday morning he went to the wood wharf and bought a load of wood for her, charging the teamster to say to her inquiry that it was sent by a friend. Shortly after the wood, came a supply of groceries with the same message. He told the story of the great battle and signal victory of that dreary Saturday night, so honorable to the poor woman, to a few ladies of his parish and enlisted their hearty sympathy so that relief came to her in many ways.

In those hard times of hard thinking and hard work, amusements had little scope. The idea of picnics had not dawned. The pastor's parties were for adults and elderly people in which children did not mingle. The pastor felt that children must be attended to. He must hold direct and intimate association with them by themselves. This he managed by inviting, at a time, a dozen or fifteen children of nearly the same age, to take a walk with him on the Neck. He would call on two or three families and get their children to invite the others whom he named. He never left anything to chance. His calls would be in the morning of a very fine day so as to be sure that the weather would be favorable. The children were to meet at his house at two o'clock precisely when he would be ready to start with them. He would train their powers of observation by calling their attention to many things worth notice. Sometimes the topic would be trees. He would talk to them about their trunks, limbs, branches, leaves, fruits or seeds by which their life was transmitted to future times. Then about what latitude meant in the manner of their growth and how all vegetation was adapted to climates; that certain climates were adapted to certain growths. He would direct their attention to such trees as they might find in the course of their walk, or such as might be in their gardens, or neighborhoods, to notice the variety in the shape of their foliage, the wonderful changes there would be from the spring when first the leaves would appear, to the autumn when the trees would be clad in garments of various bright and gorgeous hues, and reverently spoke to them of the kindness of the dear Father in providing them, not only to refresh us with their shade and delight us with their beauty, but who had loaded so many of them with rich and delicious fruit for our nourishment and enjoyment. At another time he would open their eyes as it were to the wealth of the grasses and grains, clean and delicate food, not only for human beings but for birds and beasts, and how impossible it would be for us to enjoy the cow's sweet milk and butter and cheese which add so much pleasure to our meals, were it not for the rich and nourishing food which the grasses supply. On another day the talk would be of the sweet flowers with which the dear Father has beautified the lonely hillsides as well as the cultivated gardens, the elegance of their forms, their exquisite fragrance and their medicinal uses and that we owed to them the honey which the busy bees so industriously gather. At another time he would lead their observation to the mosses, the opulent variety of their forms and shades of the ever refreshing green, from the dry mosses of the rocks on the hills, to the rich verdure of those in wet and swampy places. On another day he would discourse to them about the rocks, their formation, the revelations they could make of the wonderful progress of the works of nature through the long ages. Of the opulence of their immense variety from the building stones to the precious diamonds which flash in the crowns of kings and in the jewelry which people wear. Sometimes their walk would be to the sea-shore where the children could gather the tiny shells, the little stones smoothed and polished by the action of the waves, and the seaweeds, as they are called, and he would show to their delighted gaze the richness of their coloring and the fragile delicacy of their forms and contrast them with the great kelp leaves floating in, that they might form some idea of the wonders and beauties of the world beneath the waves. At another time their talk would be of the ocean, of which they could see a small part, of its regular tides, of its storms, of its mighty power, of its innumerable multitudes of fishes of all sorts, from the tiny fishes they saw rushing swiftly by in schools, to the great whales and other massive creatures of the deep.

After the talks and the walks he led them to what is now called the Juniper House. Then it was a new and pretty house, built and owned by one of his respected parishioners, Capt. Allen. It was called Allen's farmhouse. The farmer who cultivated the farm lived there all the time, but Capt. Allen was there only in the summer. There was a veranda facing the water and the pastor led the children into it to rest till the farmer's wife called them to the supper he had ordered in the morning. For drink they had water, milk as much as they wished, and one little cup of "frightened" coffee. The eatables were most appetizing to the hungry children; baked potatoes, fried cunners and the good lady's hot biscuits and butter, and a little fruit, if attainable as it generally was. At sunset, the children, rested and refreshed, started on their walk home with their beloved friend, delighted with the wonderful things he had told them and showed them and, last not least, the delicious treat they had enjoyed with him. Surely they loved him for they were sure he loved them. He had no Sabbath school. There were none then. But were not those days, when their beloved friend introduced them to the wonders of the dear God's providence, sacred to moral training as much as that found in the Sabbath school?

There were in those days no Sabbath school accommodations, no books of religious instruction, no little army of teachers intent on their beautiful work and devoted to it, no music, no libraries. Were not the lovely afternoons, the children of the East parish spent with their beloved friend when, with his inspiring eloquence, he talked to them of the glory of the dear God's works, as seen in the processes of nature, His great book of records which is ever before us for our instruction and delight, a prophetic premonition of the privileges now enjoyed and were they not as good a substitute as a widely liberal mind and generous heart could devise, to impart to the children some of the wealth of his far-reaching knowledge?

The good pastor evidently did not believe in vacations for boys, and he as little approved of staying away from church. When he first came to Salem he found that an elderly man belonging to the parish did not go to meeting and had not gone for years. He inquired about him and people said, "Oh, Dicky is well but he won't go to Church. He has not been for years. You could not get him to go." The pastor determined to try. He called on him and after a little talk, asked why he had never had the pleasure of seeing him at church? Dicky pointed to his shoes and said, "These 'ere shoes don't look fit to go to meetin." "Well," said the pastor, "You shall have a pair before Sunday which will be fit." He bought a good easy pair of shoes and sent them. But Dicky did not go to meeting. Soon after the pastor called to see if he were ill. No, he was well, but his hat was not in good condition as he could wish. A hat was promised and sent and still Dicky did not make his appearance. Another call revealed the fact that another article of clothing was needed. It was furnished. And still another disappointment. Dicky did not come. The good man's patience was as inexhaustible as his benevolence. He must have taken, like Mr. Angell in his noble and tireless work, "Nil desperandum" for a motto. He called the next day to express his disappointment, for he really had hoped for the satisfaction of seeing him at church. And he had a genuine pity for the poor man's lonely situation. Dicky was sorry to see how much he had disappointed his patient and faithful friend. He stood up and said, "Now, parson, this ere coat don't seem to 'sociate.'" "Is that so? Well you shall have a coat that will before next Sunday." He lost no time in going to a tailor to bespeak a coat that would "sociate." No doubt it was made at the lowest price the tailor could afford, for no one would take advantage of the generous pastor. It was sent with his best respects and the hope that he should have the pleasure of seeing him at church next day. And sure enough, his patience and perseverance were crowned with success. Dicky was at church. As soon as benediction was pronounced the pastor hurried down to shake hands with him, to bid him welcome, and to tell him how great was his pleasure at seeing him there. Quite a number of the elderly men and women came also to shake hands and bid him a most hearty welcome. Dicky's heart was touched. Never before in any house had he received such a hearty welcome as had been given him that day in that house of God. And he resolved to deserve it. He would go to church hereafter; and he did go, regardless of storms, till his last sickness. Dicky had always had a good library; a Bible and an almanac. The latter he had consulted for changes of the moon, &c., but the Bible lay under its coat of dust untouched. It had never amused or instructed him. Of late, the sermons and the readings of the pastor had opened it for him as a source of instruction and comfort. The pastor had taken the initiative in his mild and gentle way; he had drawn him into the church to receive its consolations, out of his desolate condition, careless of himself and uncared for by others. He now found the Sundays delightful. He heard two sermons, rich in noble and inspiring thought, prayers full of gratitude to the Father of Mercies, and full of faith in his infinite love. Is it any wonder that, in his heart, he carried home these and the sweet music of the psalms and hymns he had heard in the church, to cheer the hours which before had been so vacant? And was not this brightening of his closing years a rich benediction on the patient perseverance of the faithful pastor? The gentlemen and ladies of the parish afterwards, through the rest of his life, took a special pleasure in providing suitable clothing for the now happy and grateful old man.

The good pastor arranged as often as possible, little parties with an aged couple, in his benevolent desire to relieve by some cheerful variety the monotony of their painful trials. The old gentleman's early and most of his later life had been spent on the ocean. But now he was a helpless cripple; prisoner to chronic rheumatism. They lived in a small house. The front room was small, designed for a shop but not then used for that purpose. The back room, quite a sizable apartment, served for various uses,—kitchen, eating room and parlor. Generally the parlor floor was decorated with dotted sand, but when the pastor's party was expected, mats were spread for the guests. The rest of the room had the sand streaked over the clean floor in a fashion called herring-bone. One morning the pastor summoned the old lady, who was deaf, by a loud knocking on the wooden half-door of the shop, the glass upper part having been put back to admit the fresh air. He had called to inquire for the aged sufferer and having received a pretty comfortable report asked permission to take tea with them. The old lady gladly gave it knowing the pleasure it would give to her husband as well as herself. He then said, "My dear Madam, will you do me the favor to invite Grandsir and Grandm'am, Uncle and Auntie and the Misses?" These were highly esteemed friends of the aged couple and bright cheerful people who would bring cheer to the invalid when they came, and leave the memory of happy hours when they left him. It happened that morning that the parson had lingered a few minutes beside the door to speak to some children. Children all over the town would run to salute him and to receive kind words from him. Short as the time was, it was long enough for him to hear a colloquy between the old lady and her husband. "Who was there?" "Our dear pastor; he is coming to tea and we are going to have a little party, but what shall I do, the teapot's broke." Swiftly he sped down to the grocery at the corner and quickly as possible, the grocer's basket, holding beside the usual provisions a nice teapot, was sent with the pastor's best respects to the old lady to relieve her dilemma.

She took great pleasure in preparing for her guests. She would spread a snow-white cloth over the large table near the wall of the eating-room and put a big tray with her fine China tea-set on it so that it could be easily arranged. And she would make a nimble cake to be baked on a board before the fire near tea time so that her friends might have the hot cake to eat with sweet sauce, a favorite substitute for pie. A fund of entertainment was brought to the old gentleman that afternoon to banish pain and promote laughter. Each member of the party possessing a keen sense of the ridiculous, amusing incidents, odd adventures, and funny stories followed each other in mirthful succession till the hour of parting came, all too soon. Before saying "good bye," the good pastor spoke of the duty and beauty of cheerfulness, that it was produced by difficulties, and educated by the sharp trials of the school of affliction, but once attained it could lift the burthen of our crosses. And what gratitude we owed to the Father of Mercies for the providence that out of the trials we were too apt to call misfortunes, should spring the richest graces which can adorn human nature. The aged couple, grateful to their dear friend, were comforted by the treasure he had revealed to them, a wider and higher sense of the mercy of the dear God.

Dr. Bentley's last evening was spent with a large parish party at the house of Capt. James Fairfield, a highly respected parishioner who had just returned from a long voyage. The good pastor boarded with Mrs. Crowninshield in the house nearly opposite Union street. It was his custom before retiring to call on the old lady and bid her "good night." Leaning on the back of her chair he was telling her what a pleasant and interesting party it was, when he stopped, and asked her daughter, Miss Hannah, for a glass of water. She handed it as quickly as possible. He took it, raised it to his lips and fell. Help was called immediately but his fine spirit had passed beyond recall. If ever anyone deserved to receive the heavenly welcome surely did this beloved pastor. "Well done good and faithful servant. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS
AT LYNN, MASS.,

WITH SOME ACCOUNT OF THEIR LAWS AND SOCIAL CUSTOMS.

BY MISS SALLIE H. HACKER.

“There is in broad Europe one free man—George Fox, the greatest of the moderns. He looks heavenward from his earth and dwells in an element of mercy and worship.”

Thus wrote Carlyle of the founder of the Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers. He began his preaching about 1644, at that period in English history when men's minds were in a feverish state of excitement, both political, social and religious, and advocating as he did, the teachings of the Inner Light, the corner stone of Quakerism, which taught men to look within to their consciences for guidance, and not to outward forms and ceremonies, what wonder that with the zeal of new converts, some became crazed with the strain, and felt called to do and say things that have cast reproach and shame on a Society, which as a body, deserves only the highest respect and veneration, for the protest it made against the extravagance and the folly and corruption of the time. The growth of the Society was remarkable and attracted men and women from all classes and walks of life. They were feared alike by Protestant, Puritan and Catholic, and received cruel and degrading persecution from all. They were called in derision Quakers, because George Fox bade the judges "to tremble at the word of the Lord."

The fame of the new sect reached New England and a day of fasting and prayer was appointed, that "the spiritual plague might procede no further." About this time two Quaker women, Mary Fisher and Ann Austen, came in a vessel from Barbadoes into Boston, July 11, 1656. They were thrown into goal and kept there till their return on the same vessel, and books they had brought with them were burned by the executioner. Hardly had they left when eight other persons, four men and four women, arrived from England. They received a like welcome, though they had violated no law in coming to these shores. While the second party were still in prison, the Federal Commission, at their annual meeting, resolved to propose to the several General Courts that all Quakers, Ranters, etc. should be prohibited coming into the colonies and when the General Court of Massachusetts met on Oct. 14, 1656, it at once took up the case and laws were passed forbidding them to come, under penalty of fines and imprisonments; and not only the Quakers, but those bringing them and harboring them were also fined. This only seemed to encourage them to come the more, so other laws were passed, and it was ordered that every Quaker coming into the jurisdiction after having once been punished, should for the first offence suffer the loss of one ear; a second offence, the loss of the other ear; and a third, should have his tongue bored through with a hot iron. The last two laws, however, never took effect, but the first was executed in three instances—Christopher Holden, John Copeland and John Rouse each had the right ear cut off by the constable. Still this did not deter them and two years later, in 1658, a law was passed by a majority of only one vote in the house of Deputies making the return of a Quaker after exile punishable by death.

Massachusetts was the only one of the four colonies to pass this law. She had done it before to keep out objectionable people and succeeded, but in this case she did not know the people with whom she had to deal and four persons, Mary Dyer, William Robinson, Marmaduke Stevenson and William Leddra, paid the penalty with their lives. Longfellow in his "New England Tragedies," and their fellow-worshiper, Whittier, in his "Cassandra Southwick," and other poems, have told most beautifully and graphically of the sufferings of these early Friends. But after these terrible cruelties a reaction set in and the laws were either repealed or modified and in the 18th century we find them worshipping God according to their ideas.

Contrast this treatment which the Quakers received at the hands of the Puritans, with the Province of Pennsylvania, a colony founded and governed by Quakers for about a century, until the population became so heterogeneous, and the times so unsettled, that with their peculiar ideas of bearing arms, and administering oaths, it became apparent that the administration of political power must be resigned to others who did not share their religious scruples. It was a great trial to the Friends, but with "rare virtue," wrote Mr. Grahame, "they adhered to their religious principles and resigned the political authority which they had enjoyed since the foundation of the colony." Its aim had been high. Penn, the founder, wrote, "We aim at duty to the King, the preservation of rights to all, the suppression of vice, and encouragement of virtue and arts, with liberty to all people to worship Almighty God according to their faith and persuasion." Dr. Franklin, writing of "the political household" of Pennsylvania, likens it to "a father and his family, united by interest and affection." "Nobody," he says, "was oppressed. Industry was sure of Profit, Knowledge of Esteem, and Virtue of Veneration;" and the historian Lodge, after a glowing tribute to this regime declares, "The oppression of New England and Virginia of Congregationalist and Episcopalian was unknown in Pennsylvania." In Maryland, the Quakers had much trouble on account of not bearing arms and taking oaths, but as they became better known and understood and "men became prominent, and prominent men became Quakers," the laws were modified in their case, and in 1702 they were relieved from taking oaths, and we find by the beginning of the 18th century that their integrity and uprightness of character, their broad and liberal views in regard to others who differed from them, their thrift and industry, which caused them to outstrip their neighbors in wealth, won for them an enviable place in the communities in which they dwelt. This in brief is the early history of the Quakers.

No Quaker was allowed to carry arms himself, or grant money for military purposes, which in troublesome times must have brought them in conflict with the civil authorities. Especially embarrassing was it in Pennsylvania and Maryland, where a large majority of the Assembly were Quakers. As they were unwilling to offend the government on the one hand, or the Quakers on the other, by a compliance contrary to their principles, at last the common mode was, to grant money under the phrase of its being for the King's use and not inquiring how he used it. The responsibility ending with the giving. Penn once asked George Fox if he ought to give up wearing his sword, to which Fox replied, "Friend William, wear it as long as thou canst." Meeting him shortly after without it, he asked where it was, to which Penn replied, "I took thy advice, and wore it as long as I could." The Quaker could not conscientiously take an oath, but simply affirmed, by saying yea or giving a little inclination of the head.

Every one knows of Penn's treaty with the Indians. "The only league," says Voltaire, "between these natives and the Christians that was never sworn to, and never broken," and certainly the records bear out this tribute, for the intentional injury to a Quaker by an Indian, was an event almost if not quite unknown in Pennsylvania, and very rare in all American history. Two instances are on record, however, where a man and a woman were killed by Indians by mistake. The attitude of the Quakers towards slavery was equally to their credit. Though originally holding slaves like the other colonists, for the Quakers held large tracts of land and laborers were few, yet they treated their slaves with such consideration that it took away much of the repulsiveness of the institution, and gave their neighbors cause for complaint.

Elihu Coleman, a member of the Society of Friends ; the Nantucket Monthly Meeting of Friends ; and also the town of Salem, uttered fruitless but honorable protests against slavery. These, with Judge Samuel Sewall's tracts and pamphlets, were the most important anti-slavery demonstrations in Massachusetts before the Revolution. We find such well-known Quaker families in Lynn as the Hawkeses, Bassetts, Collinses, Purintons, and the Johnsons, mentioned among the owners of slaves.

For titles and worldly honors they had an especial aversion and refused to render obeisance to distinction of rank. Penn always referred to Charles II. as "Friend Charles" and the monarch styled Penn, "Friend William." When formal petitions were to be presented to the Crown, the usual phraseology had to be employed, but the Quakers pacified their consciences by appending to such addresses a declaration "that although its substance received their approval, yet they excepted against some of its style." They did not use the ordinary Master, or Sir, in conversation or correspondence, but called everybody "Friend," as they said there was no such expression in the Bible as My Lord Peter, or My Lord Paul, and Christ forbade his followers to call him Lord, or Master. Neither did they take off their hats. Penn said, "Though we do not pull off our hats, or make courtesying, or give flattering titles, or use compliments, because there is no true honor, but flattery and sin in the use of them, yet we treat all men with seriousness and gentleness, though it be with plainness, and are ready to do them any reasonable benefit or service in which we think real honor consisteth." Cromwell said, "They are a people whom I cannot win with gifts, titles or places." They also kept their hats on in their meetings, as they considered their houses of worship no holier than any other place. They removed them, however, during prayer, and it was also customary for the audience to stand at that time. In early times persons of distinction were usually addressed as "you," while those in the lower walks of life were referred to as "thou." This distinction was condemned by the Friends, who considered all men equal in God's sight, so they addressed every one as thou: "This," said Fox, "was a sore cut to proud flesh," and called down storms of wrath on the Society. They also dispensed with "good night" and "good morning." Penn excused this behavior by saying, "They knew the day was good, and the night was good, besides, they were wishes of course, so they regarded them as useless words," which the Friends avoided. They did not say grace at table, but on assembling about the board, assumed a thoughtful attitude with bowed heads, and maintained a rigid silence for several minutes. Of course dancing, cards, and games of chance, were prohibited by Quakers, as by other religious societies, but cards were employed even by Quakers for certain purposes. Before the American Revolution, generally speaking, visiting cards as we know them were not used in Pennsylvania, and as the backs of the playing cards were entirely blank, and not ornamented as at present, they were used for visiting cards, to send out invitations to receptions, for tickets of admission, and other things of a similar nature.

Music was especially denounced as corrupting in its tendencies, George Fox estimating it as having "too much of the sensuous, the frivolous, the false and the dissipated to be admitted into the houses of professing christians." He considered it "casual wisdom to know music," and "fleshly exercise to sing." Barclay, in writing of music says, "That singing is a part of God's worship and is warrantably performed among the saints, is a thing denied by no Quaker so-called and it is not unusual among them, and at times David's words may be used as the Spirit leads there unto." He then proceeds to explain that the principal objection of the Friends to the use of vocal music in their worship, consisted in the fact, "that a mixed multitude known to be drunkards, swearers, etc. sing, and by their character are eminently unsuited to worship God." But this aversion to music was not confined to Quakers at this time, for in 1536, the English Puritans presented a petition to their king, declaring "the playing of the organs a foolish vanity."

The names of the week and year were regarded as originating in mythological idolatry, so they simply named them numerically as 1st day, 2d day, etc. When Friends disagreed they seldom went to law, but appealed to a board of arbitration. If this failed, however, they were allowed the ordinary legal proceedings. Special attention was paid to the education of the young, and before Philadelphia had been established five years, her first school was started. It was kept by Enoch Flower. As early as 1689, they opened a school in Philadelphia "for all children and servants, male and female, the rich at reasonable rates, the poor for nothing," and others besides Quakers were allowed to enjoy its privileges. Later, schools and colleges for their children sprang up all over the country, and here, as in England, they had at their disposal funds to defray the expenses of the children of the poorer Quaker families. Indeed the Quakers were very kind and considerate of their own poor, always supporting them, and great care was taken to conceal any aid rendered.

In early times the Quakers prescribed no particular style of dress but were advised to dress simply and plainly. The men wore wigs, and the women colored silk aprons, "as did aristocratic women of other denominations." One writer says, "The weighty female members of the society also arrayed themselves in white satin petticoates embroidered with flowers, and pearl satin gowns, with peach colored cloaks of the same material. Their white and shapely necks were ornamented with delicate lawn or lace and also with charms." They also wore "immense beaver hats, which were fastened with a bewitching bow under the chin." In time, however, the dress assumed a more subdued form and the broad-brimmed hat and coats with straight collars and the peculiar female dress were introduced. Drab became the prevailing color for the women, and who could look more stately, dignified, or elegant, the end to be attained in those days, than the Friend, dressed in her drab or brown Irish poplin, with the cream-white raw silk shawl, showing the white muslin handkerchief folded across the "shapely throat," and the muslin cap, tied under the chin, not, however, with the bewitching bow? The bonnet, 'tis true, was not a thing of beauty, and certainly most uncomfortable, but it gave the face a refined and peaceful expression, and if the wearer had any pretense to beauty, brought it out, as a frame does a picture. The women were always respected and considered in the Friend's Society, and were given an equal voice with the men, not only in the religious, but in the business meeting. When the old Friends were attacked for showing this appreciation of the women, as contrary to St. Paul's teaching, they would reply, "Thee knows Paul was not partial to women."

A "hireling ministry," or paid minister, was an abomination in the eye of Friends. To quote from their writings, "We consider the gift of the ministry to be of so pure and sacred a nature, that no payment should be made for its exercise, and that it never ought to be undertaken for pecuniary remuneration." It was this peculiar belief in the calling to the ministry which came from God, that prevented the Friends from paying tithes or contributing to the maintenance of a paid or hireling ministry. Any one who felt "moved thereunto" had the privilege of addressing the meeting, and after a certain time, if the "testimony" borne by the Friend met with approval, he or she was recommended to the Monthly Meeting, by the select Preparative Meeting of Ministers and Elders, and, if the Monthly Meeting, after deliberate consideration, should unite in believing that a gift in the ministry of the Gospel had been committed to him or her, a minute expression thereof would be forwarded to the Quarterly Meeting of Ministers and Elders, when the case being "solidly weighed" and the sense of the Monthly Meeting concurred with, information thereof by minute, would be sent to the Monthly Meeting, also to the Preparative Meeting of Ministers and Elders, of which the individual was to be a member. And until the approbation of the Quarterly Meeting of Ministers and Elders was obtained, no such Friend was to be received as a minister, "or travel abroad as a minister."

Ministers and Elders had especial privileges. If they felt a desire or "religious concern," as the Friends expressed it, to attend meetings of other Quarterly or Yearly Meetings, or even to go to Europe and the Holy Land, they laid the "concern" before the proper meeting, and if "concurred with," a "minute" or certificate adapted to the occasion was made out, and signed by the clerk of the men's meeting, if for a man; by clerks of men's and women's meetings, if for a woman. And that the Friends might not be "impeded or improperly burdened" for want of requisite means to defray the expenses of such a journey, a committee was appointed and such assistance as they judged proper might be taken from the funds of the Meeting to meet the expenses incurred.

But this Society, seemingly so devoid of forms and ceremonies, is really most complicated in its proceedings. Everything is carried on in the most parliamentary manner, with one exception, that is, voting. No vote was ever taken in a Quaker meeting. The business meetings have a clerk and assistants. When a question has been fully considered it is the duty of the clerk to anticipate the sense of the meeting and to prepare a "minute," which being read to the meeting, receives a verbal response, "I unite," or, "that Friend speaks my mind," and in accordance with the "weight" of the meeting, that is, the expression of the influential members, it is recorded in the books. If much difference of opinion is expressed, it is carried to a higher Meeting, the Yearly Meeting being the supreme authority. For two hundred years this method has been adopted, on the whole, harmoniously. The Discipline of the Society is of extreme interest. The queries, relating to morality, attendance at worship, simplicity of dress and language, integrity in business, etc. are read at the business meeting. There were Elders to look after the Ministers, and Overseers to look after the poor and sick and to watch the members, and if any gave cause for offence or scandal, they were "delt with."

The beautiful but simple marriage ceremony of the Friends is unlike that of any other denomination, the ring and the minister being dispensed with and the couple marrying themselves. At least a month before the wedding, the couple must give notice to the Monthly Meeting of their intentions of marriage, and be "read up in meeting," as it is expressed. Here, as usual, a good deal of "red tape" is employed, but briefly, at the Monthly Meeting, the man intending to marry, appears at the Woman's Meeting, accompanied by a "suitable Friend, nominated thereto." There the parties declare that "with Divine permission and Friends approbation," they intend marriage with each other, whereupon two women Friends are appointed by "minute" to make the usual inquiry respecting the woman, and then, proceeding to the Men's meeting, they repeat the same declaration, and two men Friends are in like manner appointed to inquire concerning the man. If the consent of the parents or guardians is obtained, and his or her "clearness from other engagements" is proved, it is reported at the next Meeting, and they are allowed to marry, and two Friends of each sex are appointed to attend the ceremony to see that "good order is observed." The wedding is usually held in the meeting-house, and not on a regular meeting day. The wedding party sit on the seats facing the Meeting. After a short silence the bride and groom arise, and the groom, taking the bride by the hand, says, "In the presence of the Lord and this assembly, I take thee,—to be my wife, promising with Divine assistance to be unto thee a faithful and affectionate husband till death do separate us." Then the bride promises the same, and after prayer or preaching, although that does not always follow, as the Friends wait to be "led," the marriage certificate is signed by the bridal party and read. Then all those present who wish to sign do so. They then repair to the bride's home for the usual feast and festivities.

In early times these festivities lasted two days, but about 50 years ago they were modified, to dinner, tea, and spending the evening! Great care was supposed to be exercised in the selection of a husband or wife, and a great deal of very good advice is given in the Discipline. Penn said, "Never marry but for love, but see that thou lovest what is lovely." No Friend was allowed to marry out of the Society without being disowned. If, however, suitable acknowledgment was made and a proper sense of wrong doing expressed, they might be retained.

Hospitality was a marked characteristic of the Quakers, and any Friend traveling in the ministry was heartily welcomed to any Friend's house, and members of the Society, far and near, were notified of meetings to be held. But even more important were the calls made from house to house. "Religious opportunities," they were called, and when the Friends appeared, no matter how busy all were, or what was being done, everything was left, and the family gathered in the sitting room, where they were preached to, or prayed for, at the will of the visitors. Some times, however, not a word was spoken. It depended on the moving of the Spirit. But these opportunities were eagerly sought and highly cherished by Friends, especially if such shining lights as Joseph John Gurney, Hannah Backhouse, Beven Brethwait and other prominent Englishmen, were the visitors. No one, not a member of the Society, has any idea of the amount of traveling done in this way, and it was of great benefit and value to them, for in those early days, they did not have the daily newspapers and the telegraph to tell what their neighbors were doing, and the letters without envelopes, which took so long in transit and cost so much to send, were few and far between, so here in New England, a Friend from New York, or Philadelphia, or the Carolinas, was a godsend. Thus may be seen how far-reaching their interests were, and prominent Friends, by name at least, were known in all parts of the country.

If they did not indulge in music and the theatre they had other pleasures to compensate. They were noted good livers and the large, stately homes of the Friends, are pointed to with pride and pleasure by the people of the places "where they most do congregate," notably, New Bedford, Providence, New York, Brooklyn, and Baltimore, and especially is this true of Philadelphia, where their houses, so gloomy and unattractive on the outside, yet within, have such an air of quiet elegance and comfort, with their solid mahogany doors and silver handles and hinges, and handsome mahogany furniture. Everything was large in those days, like their hospitality.

John Adams has left a description of the "sinful feasts" he had offered to him by the hospitable Philadelphians. It was a Quaker hostess who pressed upon him at one meal, "Ducks, ham, chickens, beef, pig, tarts, creams, custards, jellies, fool's trifles, floating island, beer, porter, punch and wine," and of another Quaker house he wrote that he "drank maderia at a great rate and found no inconvenience." Is it any wonder that "Poor Richard" had so much good advice to give about eating and living simply? About this time Henry Wansey, an English traveler, confesses he was filled with awe and veneration when permitted to breakfast with President Washington, but the "two small plates of sliced tongue, dry toast, bread and butter," carried a painful sense of incompleteness to his hearty English appetite. So it is seen that good living was not the rule. The Quakers, as a body, however, were strong advocates of temperance, but not of total abstinence as the following query will show:—"Are Friends careful to avoid the use of spirituous liquors, except for medicine, and the unnecessary frequenting of taverns and places of public resort?"

The first meeting-house of the Society of Friends in Lynn, was raised on Wolf hill in 1678, and in time, as it grew too small for their accomodation, a second one was built on the same lot in 1723. This, in turn, in 1816, gave way to the third house, or present meeting-house on Silsbee street, though originally it stood on the front of the lot on Broad Street. The land was given by Richard Estes, who came from England a few years after his older brother Matthew and shared with him his large estates in Lynn and Salem. "In 8 mo 10, 1682, the Yearly Meeting of Friends was held in the house of Matthew Estes in Salem." This was the very first Yearly Meeting held in America, preceding any at Philadelphia. Of this Matthew Estes we read:—In "1703, Matthew Estes distrained of 3 pewter plates, pine boards, one silver spoon & sundries to amount of £2, 15s for Priests dues." His son John Estes also suffered to the amount of 18 shillings. This requirement of the Puritans, that all colonists should be taxed to support the ministry, was a constant source of friction, but in Lynn, measures were taken to mitigate the law as much as possible so as to maintain good feeling with the Quakers, yet we constantly read of imprisonments and seizing of property. In 1696, Thomas Farrar and John Hood, two Friends, for refusing to pay priests dues, were imprisoned nearly one month at Salem. Jonathan Buffum and Hannah Breed were the last couple to be married in the old meeting-house. Jonathan Buffum left the Friends at the time of the New Light separation, and his wife, a most intelligent, progressive and lovable woman, was afterwards disowned for "wearing a straw bonnet and keeping improper company," the improper company being her husband. There was a remarkable couple named Joseph and Margaret Buffum, who left Massachusetts for Rhode Island about 1755. He owned the village, having a grist mill, saw mill, forge, stores, &c., and she was consulted by people all about, even doctors and lawyers seeking her advice, for her knowledge and ability were great. However, I do not think her family consulted her. If they had, I hardly think we should read, "that she whipped every one of her eight sons after they were twenty-one years old!"

The first Meeting of the Society of Friends in Lynn was held in an old house on the road to Salem, near the Lynn Mineral Spring farm, and the first Monthly Meeting, at the house of Samuel Collins, July 18, 1690. But five Lynn men were present. In 1777, the Friends established a school for children of Friends. It was taught by John Pope, then by Henry Oliver, then by Micajah Collins and finally, for one year, by Paul W. Newhall. It was the second school-house "set up" in Lynn. It stood on Broad street, on the old Union Store lot, was moved to Market street, then back to the Union Store lot where finally a new house was built in which the school was held for many years. This building afterwards became the Union store. The school was supported by Friends, but in 1784, application was made to the selectmen of Lynn, for the proportion of the money which the Friends annually paid for the support of the public schools. Objection was made at first, but later a portion was allowed them for the purpose. The school was continued for about forty years. In the early part of the century, trade was carried on by barter. Shoes were carried to Boston in saddle bags, and paid for in groceries, shoe stock, and dry goods. "This barter plan of paying for work, to a system of order, was effected in the spring of 1829, by three Quakers, Isaiah Breed, James Pratt and Nathan Breed. William F. Ingalls was placed in charge of a store established by them, which they called the Union Store. At first orders were taken only from the proprietors, goods being sold to the public generally for cash. Later, however, orders were accepted from any manufacturer in good credit." Micajah Pratt and Samuel Boyce afterwards had an interest in the store. The long, lank, James Babb, who could almost reach things on the top shelf, was in charge, after William Ingalls.

Micajah Collins was a minister as well as teacher, and we read, "the boys used to wonder, how he could drop the sceptre of despotic rule, yet warm with the heat of passion and their own blood, at eleven o'clock on 4th day, and in thirty minutes or less be preaching peace!" Cyphering was his forte, but grammar was untaught by him. It remained for a later generation to make Lynn distinguished in that line, when it gave Goold Brown and his famous grammar to the country. It was Goold Brown who gave such life and interest to the "reading meetings" of his time, a sort of church sociable, which met at the different houses. Readings from the lives of Friends and other religious works, and reciting poetry, were the forms of amusement. The young Friends were past-masters in the art of repeating poetry, and could continue it for a long time without stopping. It was always recited in a singsong, which, Tennyson says, is the only way it should be repeated. A well-known Friend from New Bedford, delighted him for over an hour, thirty odd years ago, repeating his own and other poems. Originally Friends did not believe in a Sunday school, but about 60 years ago, one was started in Lynn. It was given up for a time but started again, and about thirty years ago, boys and girls from other religious denominations attended it, as it was noted for its library.

In a Friends' meeting-house, the men sit on one side, and the women on the other, and facing them and extending the whole length of the meeting-house is the gallery or the benches, two of them being raised, where the Ministers and Elders sit. The first facing seat however, is not raised, but the aged Friends, or any one whom it is desired especially to honor is invited 'to sit there. The Friends always pay great respect to age. Julia Ward Howe in one of her lectures says, in all her going about she never saw such universal respect and deference from youth to age as in the society of Friends. Among those who sat on the "high seats," as they were called in the early part of the century, in the Lynn meeting, were Micajah Collins, Matthew Purinton, Estes Newhall, Daniel Johnson, Charles Chase, James Purinton, Moses Beede, Samuel Boyce, Nathan Breed, Micajah Pratt, John B. Chase, William Breed, and Benjamin Jones; while on the facing seat, though not ministers or elders, were at one time, five by the name of Breed,—Newhall Breed, Theophilus, William, the two James, "honest Jeems" one was called, and Moses, and also Jacob Chase, John Bailey, David Rodman, and Samuel Neal. On the women's side, sat Betsey Purinton, wife of Mathew Purinton, Mary Newhall, Lois Keene, Hannah Collins, Jane Mansfield, Elizabeth Breed, Ruth Bassett, Miriam Newhall, Rachel Holder, Olive Oliver, Mary E. Breed, Eliza Boyce, Hannah Paige, Abigail Beede, and Abby W. Pratt, while on the facing seat, were Sarah Breed, Amy Breed and Miriam Breed Johnson.

David Rodman was librarian of the Friends' library, which they used to have for a time in the gallery of the meeting-house. Charles Coffin for many years made Lynn his home and was regarded one of the best, if not the best, minister of his time in Lynn. It is to be regretted that Friends' sermons were never written, that some idea might be obtained of the wonderful power they exerted over their hearers; but as they depended on the "moving of the spirit,"—the inspiration of the time and place, of course this could not be. Frequently no word was spoken during the whole meeting and the solemn silence was most impressive. A favorite text with Samuel Boyce was, "But where are the nine?" and when that fine looking, pompous man uttered those words you certainly did not want to feel that you were among the missing.

Lindlay Hoag of New Hampshire, who came to Lynn a great deal, was one of the most celebrated preachers in the Society. He was most earnest in his manner, and his words were spoken with great rapidity as the sermon progressed. One of his hearers never forgot the ending of a sermon delivered in Lynn. The following words as repeated and preserved to the present day can convey but little idea of the impression made by this large, powerful man, with his deep, rich voice and face lighted up by that inspired expression so often spoken of in connection with the early Friends. "And when ten thousand times ten thousand years shall have passed away, eternity, a boundless, endless eternity will have just begun, and friends—have you ever thought, this boundless, endless eternity must be spent with the saints in light or the devils damned?"

Another minister of the Society who lived for a time in Lynn, Moses Beede, was a great contrast to this man. He was very poetical in his expression, and very gentle and quiet in manner, though at times very earnest. An ending to one of his sermons was, "and there will be quaking and shaking as of the potsherds of the earth and many faces shall gather blackness, and many eyes be filled with tears."

In one of Whittier's poems, called "The Meeting," reference is made to two women, one of them a native as well as a resident of Lynn. The other, tho' coming from Maine, was equally well known here. The introductory note to the poem, tells of their character. "The two speakers in the meeting referred to in this poem, were Avis Keene, whose very presence was a benediction, a woman lovely in spirit and person, whose words seemed a message of love and tender concern to her hearers,—and Sibil Jones, whose inspired eloquence and rare spirituality impressed all who knew her. In obedience to her apprehended duty she made visits of christian love to various parts of Europe and to the West Coast of Africa, and to Palestine."

Mary Newhall was one of the most gifted of the early Friends' ministers, but she left the Society at the time of the New Light separation. Miriam Breed Johnson and Eliza Boyce also deserve especial mention for their untiring care and devotion to the poor and needy, not only of their own Society, but any one deserving help was sure of a ready sympathy and kindly assistance from these two most benevolent women. There was one dignified, gentlemanly Friend on the High Seats, Mary E. Breed, whose downcast eyes never appeared to see anything, yet no strangers ever escaped her, and as soon as meeting was over, she would approach them with out-stretched hand, saying, "I perceive thou art a stranger," and invite them home to dine with her.

Nathan Breed, of Breed's End, who died in 1823, left 1,000 dollars for the poor of the Society. It was a Friend who was one of the early Presidents of the old Mechanics Bank, now the First National Bank of Lynn, Isaiah Breed, and he was followed by another Friend, Micajah Pratt. Isaiah Breed afterwards left the Friends, and became a Unitarian and then a Congregationalist. He gave the land on the corner of Silsbee and Mt. Vernon streets to the Congregationalist Society, which, after the fire in 1889, when the church was burned, was sold.

It was also a Quaker, George Hood, who was the first Mayor of Lynn, and Daniel C. Baker, another Friend, was the first President of the Common Council, and afterwards the third Mayor of Lynn. Nathan Breed took an active part in the business affairs of the city, and at his death in 1872, left in his will, after certain provisions, $50,000 to the city of Lynn to establish an asylum for "indigent children."

Endless stories are told and are on record, of their benevolence and the part the Friends took in shaping and controlling the destinies of Lynn, in the early part of the century. They were men and women, whose influence and means were used to advance the cause of humanity, as well as the business prosperity of this city.

The New England Yearly Meeting of Friends held in Newport in June, to be exact, in Quaker phraseology, the 1st day after the 2nd 6th day in the 6th month, was the meeting place of Friends, not only for New England, but for all parts of the country, the New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore Meetings being largely represented. The old Truro and Fillmore Hotels, and the K. Street house, received them, and later the Ocean House and Atlantic House nearly opposite, on the Avenue, opened the season with the coming of the Friends in June, the usual custom of being entertained by Friends at their homes being impracticable on account of the vast number that went to the Meeting. Those were great days for the Friends, for while the older ones were attending meetings, and upholding the dignity of that most solid and substantial body, the younger members were taking horseback rides along the shore and having picnics in the beautiful suburbs of Newport, and many of our fathers and mothers, met there the man or the woman who was to make their future lives happy or miserable. The usual way of going to Newport in those days was by chaise or carriage, Friends coming from way down in Maine in this way. The little oval-topped hair trunks were suspended from the cross-bar under the chaise, but for the carriage, a portable rack was made, to be strapped to the back, on which the trunk was placed. The Quarterly Meeting held at Weare, New Hampshire, in October, perhaps gave more general pleasure to the Lynn Friends, for then they all started together, and the procession of chaises and carriages, with their little trunks, must have been a sight worth seeing. It was a Monday morning when the party started, driving as far as Lowell, where they stopped for dinner. Word was always sent in advance to the different hotels on the way, so that every comfort and convenience that the place afforded was waiting for them. After dinner the party drove on to Nashua, for supper and to spend the night. The next day, Tuesday, they had dinner at Fletcher's Tavern, and then on to Weare that afternoon, where they "put up" at the different Friends' houses, spending the night with one, dinner at another, and supper at another, and the fried chickens, pumpkin pies and rye drop-cakes, which were some of the delicacies served, were always looked forward to, and pleasantly remembered, by those fortunate enough to taste them. One dear old Friend, on being asked if she had enjoyed the Quarterly Meeting said, "Yes, she had a beautiful time. They had chickens all the way through." The homeward journey began on Friday, but each one went his own way, as the opportunity offered for visiting Friends in the neighborhood.

But perhaps, dearest of all to our ancestors, was the Quarterly Meeting held at Lynn in August, and how can I better close my paper, than with true Quaker hospitality, to invite you to spend the day with me at Nathan Breed's old house that used to stand on Broad street.

Preparations for this day had been going on for some time. You, as guests, did not know it, but the family did, for bright and early Monday morning they were turned out of their rooms, to take up their abode in the attic for a week, and the seventeen sleeping rooms, that the house contained, with the exception of those occupied by the servants, were put in order for the guests. This may seem rather hard on the family, but if you had seen the five cozy rooms that that big open attic was turned into, you would beg, as did some of the guests, to be "considered one of the family!" In the yard, a like transformation took place, as this Friend owned woodland, farmland and salt-marsh, which required all kinds of carts and implements to work. There were sheds scattered about for their accommodation. These were all emptied of their contents, and they, with the barn and the hitching posts, made ready for use. The genius who presided over the household affairs for about forty years, was one of that fine type of New Hampshire women, strong mentally and physically, brusque in manner, but with the kindest heart in the world, equal to any emergency, and, with a previous training in a hotel, able to assume all the care of the house, leaving the host and hostess free to entertain their guests. With well-trained servants under her—she wouldn't have them if they were not—and a number of helpers from outside, who always came at Quarterly Meeting time, the large number of guests were easily taken care of. To cook for them two large old-fashioned brick ovens, about four feet deep, were employed, which required a "slice," or oven shovel, to take the things out; a range set in the side of the chimney; a modern cook stove; and a set boiler, which would hold ten pairs of chickens at a time! After breakfast, while still at the table, the Bible was brought, and the host read a chapter, as was the daily custom of Friends, after which, a prayer was offered or remarks were made.

After the breakfast was cleared away, the table was reset for luncheon, for the Friends who came from Salem, Danvers and the surrounding towns. Then began the preparation for the event of the day, the Quarterly Meeting dinner, and the long table, which seated twenty-four persons comfortably, was made to look its best. Dinner in those days was served in two courses, the meat course and dessert, but what was wanting in those two courses, was out of the reach of the Lynn markets. At each end of the table was a large piece of roast beef, and in the centre, a piece of white halibut, covered with egg sauce, as pleasant to the eye as to the taste, while scattered along the table, were chickens, lamb, ham, etc., and every vegetable you can think of. Opposite each piece of meat was seated a good carver, and with the servants, assisted by the grand-daughters of the house, the guests were easily and quickly served.

One tall, red-headed, bashful youth from "down east," was a constant source of delight to those wicked grand-daughters. They passed him more things than even a country boy could eat, for the pleasure of seeing him blush, and hearing him say, "I wouldn't choose any, thank thee." With the desert came all kinds of pies, from blueberry and gooseberry, to cream, and lemon, capped by that beautiful golden-brown pyramid, called a "Quarterly Meeting plum pudding." The table was usually filled twice with guests, and sometimes more than twice.

After dinner, one could take a walk or drive, as this Friend not only put his own horses at the disposal of his guests, but borrowed those of his neighbors for their use.

After tea, which was usually attended by more guests than at dinner, a social evening was spent in the parlors, where Friends met Friends, not only in name, but in reality, from all parts of the country. About nine o'clock, when the Friends began to return from the various religious and committee meetings, a hush came over the assembly, or, as they expressed it, they "fell into silence," and in the hour which followed, the solemn stillness, the beautiful words of the prayer, or the earnest exhortation of the preacher, only served to deepen and strengthen the friendship of those present, and make them feel "it was good to be there." At last, the most prominent Friend present, extended his hand to his neighbor, and with the quiet grasp, and the kindly "Fare thee well," of the Friends, Quarterly Meeting day was over !

[35] Protest, Oct. 20, 1703. Capt. Joseph Praul of Exon, England, master of the ship Partridge of Topsham, in behalf of himself and his owners, Nicholas Hutchins and John Rowse, merchants, in London, and Thomas Somers, Nathaniel Rowland & John Haggling of Exon, against Abraham Tillard, Samuel Hutchins, Stephen Wessendunck, Nicholas Hutchins and John Rowse, freightors, because by a charterparty made March 17, 1702 they agreed to unload the said ship 10 days after her arrival in Boston and within 20 days more to reload her with as many quintals of fish as she could stow and that then the Partridge should then sail to Oporto, Portugal, £3, per day to be paid for each days demurrage, after the 30 days. The ship arrived in Boston, Sept. 5, 1703, and was unloaded but Francis Foxcroft and Edward Lyde Esq. factors of the said freightors had not by Oct. 20, 1703, reloaded her.

[36] Nov. 30, 1703. Answer to the above protest, by Francis Foxcroft. That Sept. 8, was the first day he had a copy of the charterparty. That he had nothing to do with the unloading of the cargo and that only $1/4$ part of the outgoing cargo was in his charge and that for 20 days he had, by Capt. John Browne of Marblehead, demanded of Capt. Praul to sign his bills of loading.

Nov. 30, 1703. Answer, by Edward Lyde, to above protest. That he had $3/4$ part of the outgoing cargo in his charge. That although Capt. Praul arrived Sept. 5, he was not ready until Sept. 22, to receive the fish, and that he, Lyde, bought 780 quintals of fish by Sept. 7, and 800 more by Sept. 29, so that Praul was not at all delayed by him.

[38] Nov. 19, 1703. Answer to protest of Foxcroft, by Capt. Praul, declaring that he stayed in Marblehead harbor by consent of Edward Lyde ; that he was ready to receive fish at any time and sail as soon as the cargo was completed but that Foxcroft's fish was in such a condition that it would probably spoil and injure the rest of the cargo, so he could not load it.

Nov. 10, 1703. Answer to Edward Lyde, that Capt. Praull unloaded and delivered the cargo in as good condition as possible considering the damage done by the storm, Aug. 11, and already protested and that Mr. Lyde's fish was scattered and so unprepared that it was impossible to collect it.

Nov. 4, 1703. Report of surveyors, John Browne and Nicholas Andrews, who at the request of Capt Praul and Edward Lyde, viewed Sept. 8, the cargo of the Patridge. They found the casks of wine had been restowed and judged them to have been unstowed by the violent storm.
